FROM SUBURBAN POINTS.

ECKLEY CLIPPINGS.

Eckley now has the finest breaker in the region. It will stand as a model of ingenious engineering. Many new devices that are not in use anywhere else for preparing coal are being put in the breaker. The mammoth structure has been built around No. 10 breaker without necessitating the loss of a single day. It is built of wood, lined on the outside with corrugated iron. The feature of the breaker is its power of consuming coal. Instead of hoisting the loaded cars to the top of the breaker by means of ropes, all the coal is dumped automatically into a huge receptacle at the bottom, and from there carried to the top by elevators on an endless chain, eight of which will hold a carful. In this way as high as 2,000 carfuls can be carried in a day, and not in the least crowd the capacity. The breaker is now the centre for all the coal produced in Eckley, and shortly the Buck Mountain coal will be run through it. The breaker is lighted throughout with electricity, as it is running day and night.

The affair also drew a number of young people to town, and all had a good time. The society extends its thanks to the band and to all who attended for their liberal patronage.

Charlie Goodwall now has a bicycle. Charlie is not any too good on common feet, and to attempt to ride a machine that has no stays on the sides is rather risky. If Charlie doesn't get laid up for repairs we shall be pleased to announce his success.
