Democracy's Waterloo.

The result of the vote of Tuesday is a Waterloo for the Democrats in all but very few sections of the United States. Republican victories and Republican gains are reported from all parts of the country, and many of the staunchest and truest friends of Democratic principles have gone down to defeat, not being able to stem the tide of dissatisfaction which set in nearly a year ago.

The opinions expressed are almost unanimous in placing whatever blame is to be given upon the last congress, or rather upon the Democratic majority of that body. The delay and apparent inability of many Democrats to properly appreciate their duties and responsibilities to their party and the country could not be expected to pass unrebuked.

An Irishman's Story. Gov. Hoard tells a story of an Irishman who, going through a thick woodland, discovered a man in a sink-hole in the morass and he rushed up to a drawling Yankee and shouted: "Come over for Heaven's sake, there's a man in the morass!"

Has Our Sympathy. Factory Inspector Watchorn has our sympathy. He made a very bad break, it appears, when he answered the letter sent from this office in reference to the semi-monthly pay law, and to cover up some of the damage that his answer did in the county to Hines, he wrote another.

in good faith has our sympathy, and we advise Mr. Watchorn to write no more official letters unless he is willing to stand by them when they get into print. However, the correspondence that passed between this office and the factory inspector is undisputed by him, so we can afford to overlook his attempt to counteract its effect by regretting that he sent out that elegant exposure of Hines' duplicity.

A Clever Lawyer.

In a murder trial before a western court, the prisoner was able to account for the whole of his time, except five minutes, on the evening when the crime was committed. His counsel argued that it was impossible for him to have killed the man, under the circumstances, in so brief a period, and on that plea largely based his defense, the other testimony being strongly against his client.

SOMETIMES it seems as if the New York and Chicago gibes at Boston, and their notion of the sort of conversation common here, are not so baseless as they usually seem, remarks a Ben-town contemporary with surprising candor. It is undoubtedly true that one young girl who told another the other day that she had read Emerson until she was tired of him and longed for something "new and refreshing" for summer reading, was recommended by her friend to try Epictetus, "because of his nice sentences," and Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, "because it sounds so much like Mrs. Blank's 'science' lectures."

TAMMANY SWAMPED

Great Political Upheaval in New York City.

Unusual Interest at Washington in the Result.

Washington, Nov. 7.-Unusual interest in the returns was manifested in Washington, great crowds gathering around the United Press office in the Washington Post building, where the results were displayed, and in all the club rooms and places of public resort where bulletins were received. The demonstrations of enthusiasm were remarkable considering the fact that all the news was unfavorable to the party in power.

Severe Criticism. "David B. Hill has come late to his personal reckoning with the independence of democracy of New York. Time after time, in disheartening succession, they have witnessed the triumph of his system of party politics. Year after year they have seen his fortunes advanced in an almost unbroken series of successes. And they have observed with dismay that his powers and the others whose names for some time he has been expanding with his opportunities, made him continually more formidable.

Murdered over Politics. Cranston Station, N. Y., Nov. 7.-A murder was committed at about midnight near Garrison's, a village on the east side of the river, a few miles south of Cold Spring. John and Benjamin Gilbert, brothers, who reside with their mother, became involved in a drunken quarrel over politics. The quarrel developed into a desperate fight and the mother, while acting as a peacemaker, had one of her thumbs nearly bitten off. John and another brother, James, had been discussing politics. John became aggressive, and James called upon Benjamin for assistance.

A Brutal Case of Hazing. Hyattsville, Md., Nov. 7.-Hazing by students at the Maryland Agricultural college is liable to result in the death of one of their number, Edwin Gott, Jr., son of the secretary of state.

Wealthy Baltimorean Dead. Baltimore, Nov. 7.-Edwin Hyatt, president of the Sherwood Distilling company, dropped dead in his office in the Equitable building. Coroner Hill decided that death was due to heart disease. Mr. Hyatt was 67 years old. He was well-known in social and club circles and was one of Baltimore's wealthy citizens.

Killed by a Band of Unknown Men. Paris, Tex., Nov. 7.-A band of unknown men went to the house of Silas Washington, an Indian, near here and fired volley after volley into it, killing Washington, his wife and mother.

Tom Johnson Beaten. Cleveland, Nov. 7.-Thomas L. Johnson is defeated by over 7,000.

ted by majorities of from 25,000 to 45,000. Strong and Goff reaching the latter figure. Tamsen has about 30,000 for sheriff.

BUMMER AND LAZARUS.

A homeless dog strayed into a San Francisco engine house, and was made welcome by the jolly firemen. Though they named him Bummer they treated him kindly, fed him, made him a bed and gave him the freedom of the house.

Bummer repaid their kindness by devoting himself to his new friends. He ran with it proudly on parade, marched with it on all occasions, and kept other dogs out of its way and guarded the men if they needed his care. He was seldom off duty unless hunger prompted a visit to a neighboring restaurant, where a friend of his engine kindly fed him.

One day, after eating a hearty meal there, he crammed his mouth with meat and bones and trotted off. He did the same the next day, and the next. Then he was followed. Going through several streets he entered a small, dark, dirty alley, and, at its further end laid the food before a half-starved dog; then, wagging his tail in satisfaction, he kept guard while the old creature ate.

Learning that Bummer was supporting a friend the firemen went to see what attractions there were about the old dog. They found a miserable, dirty skeleton with a broken leg. Much of his hair was gone and his body marked with sores and scars, telling of recent and earlier battles. Though they saw nothing desirable in the old fellow, Bummer's kindness and wistful look conquered.

The old creature was taken to the engine house, his leg put in splints, an addition made to Bummer's bed, and the newcomer given a share in the other's rights. To the dog with sores the firemen gave the name of Lazarus.

Kind treatment and good food showed their effect on Lazarus, but could not make him young again. He regained strength, recovered the use of his leg and was able to walk about, but never to run far with the engine. His duty seemed to be to guard the house while his younger friend attended to the engine in the streets.

The old fellow appeared to be the butt of every cur in the ward. The meanest and most cowardly canine of the street need only see Lazarus away from his business and there followed a fight, with the old fellow invariably the under dog. Too old and weak to battle successfully, yet he seemed to know nothing about victory. He was a dog of peace when he had his way; of defeat when the other had a chance.

After a few battles Lazarus was let alone when Bummer was near, but never if his champion was out of hearing. The strong dog need not hear the faint yelp for aid of his venerable friend and there came like a black flash through the streets something that sent the aggressor tumbling over and over without knowing what had struck him. If the scamp desired to fight he must meet Bummer's strength and prowess; usually the battle ended with the champion's first charge.

Though kindness and care prolonged the life of Lazarus, they could not stop the later approach of death. It came slowly but surely. The old dog ceased to eat, nor would he try the nicest dainties. Bummer's watching and the attention of the firemen, appreciated by the old fellow, made his end easy.

The men made a box, placed the body of the dead dog in it, and followed by Bummer, carried it out to a vacant lot and gave it decent burial.

A change came over Bummer after his friend's death. He lost friskiness, refused to follow the engine, declined food, would not take medicine, and seemed to be grieving himself to death. Though he received the attention of the firemen kindly, he showed no interest in them nor anything they did. Sitting at the door of the engine-room, or lying in his bed, he allowed time to pass as though he had lost all interest in life. Thus he gradually wasted away, died from grief and starvation. A few weeks after the death of Lazarus Bummer's dead body lay in the same bed.

The firemen made a neat box for a coffin, and carried their friend to a pleasant vacant lot that had been used for the other, and, while some dug a grave for Bummer, others dug up the other dog, and in the new grave they laid the friend's side by side. Over the mound they raised a stone, on which they had the names of the faithful friends, and, unless the stone has been removed recently, it yet marks in that vacant lot the last resting place of Bummer and Lazarus.-Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Eiffel Tower Dissected. The total weight of the ironwork in the Eiffel tower is 7,707 tons, and the foundations of each of its four independent legs are sunk to a depth of fifty feet. It is constructed of iron throughout (most people think it is of steel), the pieces of the metal used in its construction being 112,000. The exact height of the great iron skeleton is 984 feet (usually given as even 1,000), and it is to be the property of the builder for twenty years, beginning with 1889, after which time the sole ownership reverts to the city of Paris.
