the servants about it, but they allike professed to be unaware that it had happened.

Presently his only son came in.
"George," said his excited parent, "do you know anything about his broken pipe?"

"Father," solbed the lad, "I cannot tell a lie. Forgive me, father! It was I who did it. I cannot tell a lie. Forgive me, father! It was I who did it. I cannot tell a lie!

Mr. Shollicks patted the boy's head, in intimation that the offense was forgiven, and then rushed from the house to melt into an agony of tears.

But it was not the shattering of his meerschaum that distressed him now. He had quite forgotten it. A worse thing had befallen him.

"Heaven help me:" he moaned.
"Ever since my son was born it has been my ambition, my dearest wish, to rear him for my own profession; and now—and now—! Oh, it is a cruel blow."

A SONG OF HARVEST

Reap, O reap! gather and reap.

Where golden ripples laugh and run,
For the hush of noontide, still and deep, Lies on the ripened ears like sleep, Where cornlands greet the sun.

Lift up your weary eyes, behold The golden fields, the golden air; The west wind flecks the swaying gold With light and shadow manifold, And gold gleams everywhere.

Reap, O reap! while the sickles sing The harvest song of the world at rest; Reap with a rbythmic sweep and swing Till stience falls with evening, And peace is manifest.

Lift up your joyful eyes and see
The silver night, with glidling feet
Move from the sunset glimmeringly,
And, priestess of God's ministry,
Hallow the garnered wheat, rections. They had already searched every corner of Devon castle for little St. Clair, the Duke's oldest son; but he was not in the attic, nor in the attic, nor in the waters of the moat, nor yet in the shrubbery about the castle. Nobody knew just how long he had been gone. Certain it was, however, that even the twenty guines gold piece, which the Duke offered to the man who should find him, still lay on the table unclaimed.

And now it was discovered that Rolla, the big bull dog and inseparable companion of the little lord, was also nowhere to be found. Had they wandered beyond the walls and been lost in the immense woods that lay stretched many miles between them and London? That was what everybody now feared. It was even worse than this, for the Duke had scarcely ceased to explain this to the boy's mother when a servant entered the room breathlessly. "Please, your Honor," he exclaimed hastily, touching his hat, "the gypsics have been about here. Traces of them have been seen on the edge of the forest. Goeffrey and Thomas, the stable boys, found the ashes of a fire at the border of the small clearing. The knaves were all gone, but it would seem that they found the asnes of a nre at the state of the small clearing. Lord Aberdeen once left London at midnight in a sleeping-car for the north. In the morning, he saw stranger opposite him. "Excuse me, said the stranger, "may I ask if you are rich?" Somewhat surprised, his lordship replied that he was tolerably well to do. "May I ask," continued the stranger, how rich you are?" "Well, if it will do you any good to know," was the reply, "I suppose I have several hundred thousand pounds." "Well," went on the stranger, "if I were as rich as you and snored as loud as you, I should take a whole car, so as not to interrupt the sleep of others."
