FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS. To Meet in Short Session Monday, December 3.

Some Interesting Facts About the Work to be Performed Between Now and March 4—Queer Ways of Unsuccessful Candidates.

[Special Washington Letter.]
The congress is about to convene and a number of the representatives of the people are already here making preparations for the winter. The Fifty-third congress will expire by constitutional limitation on the 4th day of next March; and therefore the ensuing session, which will last but three months, will be called the short session. Although the first session of the Fifty-fourth congress will not convene until the first Monday of December, 1895, unless especially convened by presidential proclamation, the life of that congress will begin on the 4th day of next March, at noon, when the life of the present congress will expire. That is to say, although the next congress will not constitutionally convene until December, 1895, the terms of all the members elected to that congress in the re-elections will commence on the 4th day of next March, and their salaries will begin on that date.

During the nine months intervening between the 4th day of next March and the first Monday of the following December each member of congress will be entitled to the sum of $410 every month, which he will draw from the sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives. During that period of inactivity, so far as legislation is concerned, each member of congress will draw the sum total of $3,744. There are 356 members of the house of representatives, and the total sum to be drawn in salaries by the members of the house during the nine months of legislative inactivity will be $1,332,864. There are eighty-eight senators, each of whom will be entitled to the sum of $3,744, so that the total amount to be paid in salaries to the members of the senate the nine months of legislative inactivity will be $329,372. Consequently, the sum total to be paid to the members of the senate and house of representatives in salaries during the nine months of legislative inactivity will be $1,662,236.

The reader will be astounded at first with the figures, which show that more than one and a half millions of dollars will be paid to members of the senate and house during a period of nine months when they are not in session, and are therefore apparently receiving compensation from the government for doing nothing. As a matter of fact, although the senators and representatives will not be in Washington, except as a few of them may come individually to look after departmental affairs, each and every one of them will be diligently engaged in rendering the best possible services to his state and congressional district. Although they may remain at their homes, every mail will bring to them letters from some of their constituents relating to public business, and it will be the duty of the senators and representatives to attend to the wants and desires of their constituents as expressed in their letters.

Although the senators are entitled to annual clerks to look after the routine part of their business, each and every one of them will be kept busy during that period of seeming inactivity in attending to the wants of their people. The representatives are not entitled to clerks, except when the house is in session, and therefore there will fall upon each of them an abundance of work of a routine nature which may be presumed to be a great deal more exacting than the labor required of the senators; but inasmuch as each state comprises several congressional districts, the burden of public duty will be about evenly divided.

Fortunately, under our system of government the senators and representatives are the servants of a somewhat exacting people, and if they desire to remain in public life they cannot and will not be sluggards and laggards in their work. Therefore, although it is true that a large sum of money will be thus drawn from the treasury for the payment of the salaries of the senators and representatives, when we remember the magnitude of the country and the important interests which require the attention of these public servants, we may naturally conclude that the money thus disbursed is properly placed.

It is fair to anticipate that during the short session of the congress which is about to convene a number of our public servants may be indifferent to national legislation and local interests. Only where a man's treasure is may it be said that there is his heart also. The many men in public life to-day who failed of re-nomination last summer, or who recently failed of reelection at the polls, feeling that their race is run politically, may prove indifferent to the wants and wishes of their people, and therefore recalcitrant to the trusts which have been committed to them. This is always the case during the short sessions of congress, and it is fair to presume that indifference and lassitude will mark the course of at least a few of the unfortunate statesmen during the coming winter. It is not an uncommon thing for men who have thus politically fallen by the wayside to pick up their traps, leave Washington ostensibly for the Christmas holidays and devote their entire time, attention and energies to the preparation of plans for the future. It is probable, however, that the so-called "docking law," which deprives members of congress of their salaries unless they are actually on duty, may, during the coming short session, prevent a great deal of that absenteeism which has been so prevalent upon similar occasions in the past.

There are thousands of bills upon the calendar of the house, or in the custody of the regular committees, the majority of them representing claims against the government—and probably a large percentage of them are just claims. They have been introduced by members of congress in compliance with the wishes of their constituents, and there is great anxiety concerning them in every congressional district in every state of the union. Very few of them will become laws. It might almost be said that none of them will ever run the gauntlet of both houses of congress and receive the approval of the president. During the short session of congress the committees on appropriations consume the greater portion of the time of both houses, to the almost total exclusion of other business. It is primarily necessary for the present congress to consider and pass bills making appropriations for the expenditure of the government from July 1, 1895, to June 30, 1896. If this were not done, there would be no money available for the purposes of government expenditure after the 30th of next June; and congress will not be in session to make appropriations until the following December. Therefore, persons interested in private bills may as well dismiss all hope of their passage during the Fifty-third congress. Except in rare instances nothing of this can be done.

The short session of congress will occupy only 91 days. Under a provision of the constitution, on the first Monday of December the vice president and the speaker will assume the gavel in the senate and in the house, the chaplains will offer prayer in each place and the session will begin. There will be 23 days of the session in December, 31 days in January, 28 days in February and 4 days in March, making a total of 91. But congress always adjourns for 10 days in order that the Christmas holidays may be uninterrupted and enjoyed, and thus there will be but 81 days of actual legislative work, including Sundays. In that brief space of time the committees on appropriation must consider and place before the senate and the house for discussion and final passage bills appropriating in the aggregate about $500,000,000. This enormous amount of money must be carefully grated. It must be distributed wisely, so that each bureau of each executive department shall have sufficient, but no more than sufficient, for the actual expenditures required for an economical administration. It is a great trust, a wonderful responsibility which the people commit to their public servants. Naturally, therefore, the subject of appropriations will occupy nearly all of the time of the statesmen during the coming short session. Private bills, the matters in which single individuals are vitally interested, must be laid aside for the general welfare. By the way, that is one of the principal statements set forth by the original constitutional convention over which George Washington presided. The declaration was made that "we, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union (et cetera), promote the general welfare (et cetera), do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America." Consequently, it may be said that under "the general welfare" clause of the constitution congress acts wisely in attending to the enormous and important appropriation bills, to the exclusion of the just claims of private individuals.

SMITH D. FRY.
The Soap Mines of California.
The wonderful natural soap mines at Owen's Lake, Cal., are accounted for by the following theory, which has been advanced by a well-known western scientist: The water of the lake contains a strong solution of borax and soda. In the water a curious species of grub breed by millions. These grubs go through their various transformations and finally emerge as short-winged, heavy-bodied flies, very fat and oily. They live but a few days, dying and falling into the lake in such numbers as to be frequently washed ashore in layers more than a foot thick. The oily substance of the dead flies blends with the alkali of the borax and soda, and the result is a layer of pure soap, corresponding in thickness to the drift strata of the dead flies, a foot deep of flies making a layer of soap nearly an inch thick. These strata, repeated year after year, have formed the celebrated "soap banks of Owen's lake," where a large force of men have been constantly employed for a number of years.

Living in the Wild and Woolly.
He was from one of the wildest sections in the southwest and the reporter was having a little talk with him at the hotel in the city.

"Living is pretty high in your section, isn't it?" inquired the reporter.
"Yes, it comes pretty high."
"It's good, though, isn't it?"
"Oh, yes; it's bully while it lasts," and the man's eyes snapped under his sombrero.
"While it lasts?" repeated the reporter, inquiringly.
The man nodded.
"How do you mean?" asked the reporter direct.
"Well," replied the man, slowly, "it don't always last. Every now and then a postol pops and that ends the business, as far as that feller is concerned, and it's just as likely to be one as 't'other."—Detroit Free Press.
