French Postal Cards.

A unique innovation of the postal card system will soon be adopted in France. Instead of the cards being separate, as they now are, they will be issued in the form of check books with stubs. A memorandum of the contents of the card can be entered on the stub, and the sender can have this stamped at the postoffice before the card is detached, so that a verified record of the correspondence can be kept.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

Many years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., compounded this medicine of vegetable ingredients which had an especial effect upon the stomach and liver, rousing the organs to healthful activity as well as purifying and enriching the blood. By such means the stomach and the nerves are supplied with pure blood; they will not do duty without it any more than a locomotive can run without coal. You can not get a lasting cure of Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, by taking artificially digested foods or peppin—the stomach must do its own work in its own way. Do not put your nerves to sleep with so-called celery mixtures, it is better to go to the seat of the difficulty and feed the nerve cells on the food they require. Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness and Nervous Affections, such as sleeplessness and weak, nervous feelings are completely cured by the "Discovery." It puts on healthy flesh, brings refreshing sleep and invigorates the whole system.

Mrs. K. HENKE, of No. 86 North Halsted St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I regard my improvement as simply wonderful. Since taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in connection with his 'Pleasant Pellets' I have gained in every respect, particularly in flesh and strength. My liver was dreadfully enlarged and I suffered greatly from dyspepsia. No physician could give relief. Now, after two months I am entirely relieved of my disease. My appetite is excellent; food well digested; bowels regular and sleep much improved."

MILLIONS OF CANNIBALS.

PLENTY OF WORK FOR MISSIONARIES IN CONGO FREE STATE.

Four-Fifths of the People Eat Human Flesh—A Dead Chief's Wives and Slaves Interred Alive.

M. R. DORSEY MOHUN, United States commercial agent to the Congo Free State, has just returned to Washington after two very exciting years in the Dark Continent. He has brought with him some wonderful stories of battle and adventure, a large collection of trophies and curiosities, and much interesting information. Just at present he occupies a desk at the State Department, where he is preparing a report that will be submitted to Congress.

"Twenty millions of people in the Congo Free State are eaters of human flesh," said Mr. Mohun. "That is about four-fifths of the entire population. Cannibalism is strictly forbidden by the Government of the country, but nine hundred white men are not able to exercise a very complete control over such a vast number of savages occupying 1,000,000 square miles of territory. Individuals are caught in this act occasionally and punished with death. One day in last May as I chanced to enter a village that lay on the route of my expedition the natives fled precipitately. I was at a loss to know the reason why until I discovered certain evidences of a big family feast. They had been cooking a man, and one of his legs was in a pot over the fire.

"I lost no time in throwing pot and all into the river. The man's head was stuck on a fence. Among those people it is the custom to keep the head of a victim in this way for four or five days, at the end of which it serves for a stew. The brain is highly esteemed. The chief of the village was tried on the charge of cannibalism and afterward hanged, I believe. The man whom I found potted was a slave and had been purchased for food. Some of the tribes commonly buy slaves to eat, just like pigs or chickens, fattening them on bananas, palm oil and other nutritious provender, and killing them when they are in suitable condition.

"What do the slaves think of it? you ask. Well, they do not seem to mind it very much. In Africa such things are looked upon from a different point of view. I once saw fourteen persons buried alive, and they exhibited the utmost indifference to their fate. A great chief had died, and, according to custom, it was necessary for his favorite wives and some of his slaves should accompany him to his funeral obsequies.

"A hole was dug in the ground about as large as a fair sized room, and in the middle of it the corpse of the angust defunct was placed. One of his wives descended into the excavation and squatted at his feet; and two more wives disposed themselves similarly on either side of him. His body was done up in about a thousand yards of cloth. This was an evidence of his wealth, for cloth is money in savage Africa.

"In the hole, forming a circle around the corpse, squatted ten slaves. Neither they nor the four wives manifested any concern about their approaching fate, which they evidently regarded as a matter of course. Up to the end of the ceremony, which was quite elaborate, they did not utter a sound, or make a struggle. At a signal men began to throw back the earth into the pit which was to be a grave for the living as well as for the dead. The operation was continued until all of the unfortunate were covered up and concealed from view. While the hole was being filled up there was a continuous and unearthly hullabaloo, with shouting and dancing and beating of tom-toms.

"Why did I not interfere? I was not strong enough. My escort numbered only a few men, and I could not have prevented the tragedy, while any attempt on my part in that direction would probably have cost my own life. The living burial I have described was on a small scale compared with similar sacrifices that are made from time to time at the funerals of native potentates. It often happens that expeditions passing through the country find in the villages slaves with wooden blocks on their ankles. They wear these cloths to prevent them from escaping while they are being fattened for eating. When thus discovered by white men they are always set free.

These savages are great cowards. On one occasion, with only four guns, I did not hesitate to attack about twenty villages. A mail bag was stolen from my camp at night. I made a demand upon the local chief for the return of the bag. My request was not acceded to, and so I proceeded to wage war on the whole country thereabout. I made my way along the river in a small steambot, attacking and burning one village after another. I destroyed ten or twelve of them in this manner. Finally I captured the chief's son and sent word to his father that I would hang the young man if the bag and its contents were not forthcoming by the next morning. The response was very prompt this time. To my surprise two mail bags were returned to me. Oddly enough, I had not missed the second one.

"You will easily understand that in the Congo Free State, which has an organized government and a sovereign in the person of the King of the Belgians, an ordinary traveler would not be permitted to make war upon the natives in such fashion. But I had official authority and discretionary power, being recognized as representing the United States.

"The Government of the Congo Free State bestowed upon me the Order of the Lion in recognition of my military services. Of the 1400 natives in my party about 700 were women. I would never go on an expedition in Africa without taking women along. They are most useful to carry food and other burdens. In order that the men shall fight well and be contented it is necessary that they shall not be asked to carry loads. My dugout canoe was a fine affair. It was seventy-five feet long and made from a single log. There was room for forty paddlers, in addition to whom it carried thirty soldiers and their wives—in all one hundred and twenty-five people, with baggage, etc. In this craft thrashed out we could go faster than my steamer on the Congo. A comfortable house of grass was built on board of her.

"The collection which I brought back with me includes some wooden figures of men and women, which are fetiches. The natives do not exactly worship them, but burn things before them. In the lower Congo, when a person is suspected of theft, a nail is jabbed into the heart of such a wooden figure, and the supposition is that it will cause the death of the offender. In every tribe there is a fetich house, in which fetiches are kept and cared for by the fetich man. The latter is a sort of doctor, and he will sell poisons to people who desire to get rid of enemies."

WISE WORDS.

A man is a fool in some new way every day.

Invalids Exempt From Wrinkles.

It will often be noticed that in a family of women one who has been an invalid for years will be the one who will preserve her youthful looks the longest. Invalids almost always have a certain exemption from wrinkles and time-worn faces. This must be due to the sheltered, quiet lives they lead, the freedom from excitement and the partial immunity from cares that touch them last of all, being borne by the rest of their friends as far as may be. There must be a little moral in the statement, too. It is not desirable to shirk one's share of work or worry for the sake of preserving one's good looks. But one might easily think how far those worries and that work may be avoidable and so emulate the serenity of the invalid.—St. Louis Star-Sayings.

Making Soldier Clothes to Fit.

"Does your clothing fit you?" is likely to become a common question among the soldiers. It has been a custom largely followed by soldiers to draw clothing from the quartermaster's stores larger in size than needed, so that they could have it made over and fitted better to the person; but the Quartermaster-General thinks this an unnecessary expense to the soldiers, and a few days ago wrote a requisition directing attention to that part of the army regulations which specifies that "no issues of clothing of larger sizes than actually needed for the enlisted men, for the purpose of altering them into smaller sizes can be made," and which also makes it the duty of the commanding officers to see that the unmade clothing, when made, conforms strictly to the standard patterns.—Philadelphia Press.

Captured a Live Doe.

Little Willie Peters is a hero and he is the proudest lad in town. A few days ago, near the Bloch farm and in Dry Creek bed, Willie made captive a full-grown doe which had been chased by dogs. He threw his arms about it while the fleet-footed animal was running toward the brush for refuge, and though he was kicked a couple of times, he clung to her until aid came, and now the deer is in a pen. Willie is but thirteen years old.—Sonoma County (Cal.) Tribune.

LOADING A CATTLE SHIP.

A CIRCUUS LIKELY TO FORM PART OF THE PROCEEDING.

Wild Cattle That Will Do Anything Except Go on Board—Occasional Chases In the Water.

THE Le Fevre, belonging to the Jersey City Central stock yards, lay alongside a White Star liner bound for Liverpool, says the New York Sun. Three or four hundred cattle had already been transferred to the hold of the steamer and had made but slight objection to the process. The remainder of the herd were to be accommodated on the steamer's upper deck, to be "saloon passengers," as one of the ocean drovers remarked, and getting them up into their elevated quarters was the topic under consideration.

The steep ascent being pronounced impracticable, and other gangways with which it was proposed to reduce the grade being condemned as too weak, the upper end of the gangway was lowered with ropes some distance below the deck, so that it was at an angle of about forty-five degrees. High board sides were affixed to prevent the cattle from jumping overboard, and up this steep incline the cattle were forced, reaching the deck by a jump from the end of the gangway. There was much protest in the way of bellowing.

Two monstrous bullocks, one a dark red with a broken horn, the other dappled with white, were first to arrive at the end of the gangway. They looked up anxiously, and then turned as if seeking some way of escape, but their companions were crowding thick behind them, and on either side cowboys stood urging them on with admiring blows and shouts. In spite of themselves they were forced a short distance up the gangplank, but there they hesitated, and no amount of urging and jabbing with long poles could induce them to climb further. Their eyes had the desperate, hunted look of wild creatures at bay. The spotted white bullock advanced a step or so ahead of his companion. A cowboy, young and vigorous, whose overcoat had lost nearly all of its outside glory from repeated exploits amid such scenes, took advantage of this amiable disposition on the steer's part to give his tail a twist. This device caused the huge creature to advance a few steps higher. The bullock with the broken horn stood rooted to the spot. He lifted his head and looked over the side of gangway as if contemplating a leap overboard. Then he turned and looked back, and seemed determined to do anything rather than climb to those unknown regions above. One of the steamer's crew put some hay temptingly at the top of the passage. The cowboy tweaked again at his victim's tail, the others shouted like madmen and waved their long poles, and the spotted white steer sprang forward in desperation and almost gained the top of the gangway. The long poles were dug into his panting sides. He made a mighty effort and grabbed a mouthful of the hay. More blows, more cheers, and, after pausing irresolutely for another moment, he made the final leap up onto the deck.

In the meantime no amount of coaxing, poking or pushing could induce the red steer to stir. Again and again he looked over into the water as if meditating a leap. The prowess of his companion only seemed to convince him of the impossibility of his doing likewise. He glanced around in terror, then, undeterred by the crowding horns at the foot of the passage, he turned in some indescribable way, though the space seemed much too narrow for him, and dashed down among his companions to seek his old quarters.

The men let him go and devoted their attention to the others. Now that one steer had scrambled up the steep incline it was not so difficult to persuade the rest to follow his example, particularly with fresh wisps of hay as inducements. Some proved intractable, and, after scrambling partly up the gangway, retraced their steps, and created panic among their fellows waiting at the foot. The cowboys did not permit these to have their own way, as did the red steer. They seized them by the horns and forced them to turn and again essay the difficult passage. The red-checked cowboy, whose tattered coat attested his valor, was particularly efficient in managing the rebellious spirits among the herd.

"That's Dave Erricson. He's a rare hand with the cattle," commented the Captain. "One night, when we were loading further up the river, and had a particularly wild lot of Colorados to deal with, two bullocks jumped overboard. Quick as a flash, Dave was over after them. He straddled the back of the nearest one, got hold of his horns, used them as a rudder, and steered that steer exactly where he wanted him to go. We got them both back, and it was a pitch dark night, too."

"Cattle swim well, don't they?" asked the reporter.

"Swim splendidly. If the weather is hot and they happen to be thirsty they would just as lief jump overboard as not. They're not as silly as sheep, though. When we're loading sheep, if one jumps over into the water the whole business follows, whether they want to or not. That's their nature."

"Are the cattle ever seasick when there's a heavy sea on?" asked the reporter.

"No, never. I never knew one of them to refuse its food. Horses get seasick, but not cattle. Sometimes when there's a big storm all the compartments that restrain the cattle, and the railings to which they are tied, are washed away. Then the ocean drovers have work trying to keep them in order. Sometimes everything is washed away, and cattle and all go to the bottom; but the owners don't care, because each bullock is fully insured as soon as it leaves the stock yard."

Every one of the cattle destined for shipment is inspected at the stock yard by a United States Inspector, and has a numbered metal tag inserted in the right ear. This is a matter of courtesy to the English Government, and to certify that the cattle are sound.

The Old-Time Warming Pan.

Warming pans are as much a thing of the past as spinning wheels, and are seen in modern homes, like the latter, only as quaint ornaments. Yet it is not so many years ago that they held an important place in the domestic economy and were the source of otherwise unattainable comfort in the chambers where breath congealed and the sheets on the beds were like glaciers. A lady who is now elderly, thought not yet old, tells of the perforated brass warming pan of her childhood, and when company was in the house a little sugar was sprinkled over the coals in the warming pan in their honor. A Great Painter's Masterpiece.

Stupendous as are the dimensions of many pictures exhibited year by year on the walls of the popular galleries, and which would seem to appeal for attention more by reason of their quantity than of their quality, it is interesting to remember that Meissonier's little masterpiece commonly known in France as "The Five-Franc Piece," and representing two men discussing the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom, the whole being painted with the greatest accuracy and finish on a surface smaller than that of a five-shilling piece, is yet valued at close on $5000. The precious little picture was painted by the great artist for a wager in a few hours.—Cincinnati Commercial.
