Animosities which do not rise to the dignity of passions evince themselves in spite. In Quilp Dickens gave the world a type of spite in its worst form—a mean anger which finds vent in the infliction of small injuries on its passive recipient. The most evil thing in apite is that it never even claims to be founded on a sort of wild justice. It glories in its own wilfulness, and lux-briates in venting a spleen for which to just cause exists. There is always hope for a day of high passion. Even evil passions, if they are on a great scale, are generally closely related to noble passions, and often grow in the same soil. But spite is the product of empty lives and mean vexations, of a poor soil, a poor scale of living, and betoken a dwindling power both of love and hate. What is wanted to sweep it naws is any interest involving full employment for the higher energies. There has usually been more show of spite among women of the leisure classes there has been less occupation and a pettier scale of life. Amongst the modern women who go into business or professions, whatever may be their defects, there is at least a great emancipation from social spites. They compete cagerly with each other, but they do not atck plas into each other, as they used to do when they had nothing better to anuse them. A multitude of cmail interests is net favorable to the growth of stream of the modern than the spite that grows from an inherent disposition to rail at its own surroundings.

Misplaced Gratitude.

I was told, the other day, an amusing child story, the utter simplicity of which redeems it from irreverence. A certain worthy woman had a family of small children, to whom she frequently made edifying remarks. One day she sent her little boy for the milk; he was away some time, then returned empty handed, with an apprehensive expression in his eye. Siding up to his mother, he remarked;

"Ma, one ought to thank God for everything, oughtn't one? I think I've heard you say so."

"Yes, that's quite right," replied the unsuspecting parent; whereupon the child's face broadened with a relieved smile.

"Well then, thank God I've broken the smile.

"Well then, thank God I've broken the jug," said he.
His position was unmistakably logical, and it took his good mother sometime to explain to him that "circum, stances altered cases," and that if he broke jugs again he would be punished.

Trust in God.

It is a wise providence that we cannot see the future. We can see through one pane of glass easily, but through ten placed together we cannot see, yet each is transparent. By living a day at a time we get along well and all is clear, although we cannot see through all the purposes of God concerning us.

Opening Court with Prayer, One of the learned justices of the Mains Supreme Court, than whom ne man better knows how to appreciate a really amusing thing, was holding court at Ellsworth, and, according to honored custom, called in a local clergyman to open the session with a supplication to heaven. This worthy gentleman came, and after a chat with the justice proceeded to address the giver of all good and perfect things thus: "Almighty God, we beseech Thee to bestow upon the presiding justice the wdom which he so greatly needs!" It is said that the same judge once opened court after prayer which began this way: "Oh, Lord, we pray Thee to Cold Walk for Her Wedding Day, A romantic story comes from the town of Parsons. Samuel Collenback and Miss Ada Parker were engaged to be married in the village church on Wednesday evening. The groom, minister and guests were in waiting. The bride failed to appear. After waiting half an hour the guests dispersed and the church was closed. At 10:30 o'clock the bride arrived home in an exhausted condition. She had walked all the way—five miles—from Wilkesbarre, She had gone to the latter place early in the evening to see a dressmake; who had disappointed her innothaving her wedding trousseau ready. Miss Parker thought she could get to church in time, but when she tried to do so she found the great snowstorm had blockaded the railroads and electric car lines. She then determined to walk, Arriving in Parsons, she aroused the groom and the preacher, and, proceeding to the church, they were married in the presence of witnesses by
