THE BATTLE OF RIVOLI

Napoleon Said That His Life Really Began There.

The short Campaign Was the Turning Point of the War, and Shaped the History of Europe for Twenty Years—
—Root of the Austrians.

Prof. Sloane's Life of Napoleon in the Century describes the masterly Italian campaign, in which Napoleon's military genius first won world-wide recognition. Prof. Sloane thus describes the battle of Rivoli:

At early dawn began the conflict which was to settle the fate of Mantua. The first fierce contest was between the Austrian left and the French right at St. Mark; but it quickly spread along the whole line as far as Caprino. For some time the result was in suspense, since the French left, at Caprino, yielded for an instant before the onslaught of the main Austrian army made in accordance with Alvinzky's first plan, and, as he supposed, upon an inferior force by one vastly superior in numbers. Berthier, who by his calm courage was fast rising high in his commander's favor, came to the rescue, and Massena, following with a judgment which has inseparably linked his name with that famous spot, finally reformed order to the French ranks. Every successive charge of the Austrians was repulsed with a violence which threw their right and center back toward Monte Baldo in ever-growing confusion.

The battle waged for nearly three hours before Alvinzky understood that it was not Joubert's division, but Bonaparte's army, which was above him. In his zeal he then pressed forward on the plateau beneath the height to bring more of his troops into action, and Joubert somewhat rashly advanced to check the movement, leaving the road to St. Mark unprotected. The Austrians, prompt to take advantage of his blunder, charged up the hill, and seized the commanding position; but simultaneously there rushed from the opposite sides three French battalions, clambering up to retrieve the mistake. Their physical strength and nervous activity brought them first to the top, and again the storming columns were thrown back in disorder.

At that instant appeared in Bonaparte's rear an Austrian corps estimated by him as four thousand strong, which, having come down the valley on the left bank, had now crossed the river to take the French right at Rivoli in its rear. Had they arrived but a minute sooner, the hill of Rivoli would have been lost to the French. As it was, instead of making an attack, they had to await one. Bonaparte directed a gallant artillery fire against them, and thus gained time both to reform his ranks and to hold the newcomers in check until his own reserve, coming in from the next hamlet westward, cut them entirely off from the retreating columns of Alvinzky, and compelled them to lay down their arms.

Thus ended the worst defeat and most complete rout which the Austrian arms had so far sustained. Such was the utter demoralization of the flying disintegrated columns that a young French officer named Rene, who was in command of fifty men at a hamlet on Lake Garda, successfully imitated Bonaparte's ruse at Lonato, and displayed such an imposing confidence to a flying troop of fifteen hundred Austrians that they surrendered to what they believed to be a force superior to their own.

Next morning all last night's gains had marched on to gain the point, appeared on the slopes of Monte Baldo above the pass of Corona, and united with Massena and Joubert to drive the Austrians from their last foothold. The pursuit was continued as far as Trent. Thirteen thousand prisoners were captured in those two days.

This short campaign of Rivoli was the turning point of the war, and may be said to have shaped the history of Europe for twenty years. Chroniclers dwell upon those few moments at the hill above the plateau of Rivoli, and wonder what the result would have been if the last Austrian corps had arrived five minutes sooner. But an accurate and dispassionate criticism must decide that every step in Bonaparte's success was won by careful forethought, and the most effective disposition of the forces at his command. So sure was he of success that even in the crises when Massena seemed to save from defeat at the last moment on the right, he was self-reliant and cheerful. The new system of field operations had a triumphant vindication at the hands of its author.

The conquering general meted out unstinted praise to his invincible squadrons and their leaders, but said nothing of himself, leaving the world to judge whether this man or demon, who, still a youth, and within a public career of but one season, had humiliated the proudest empire on the continent, had subdued Italy, and on her soil had erected states unknown before, without the consent of any great power, not excepting his own. It is not wonderful that this personage should sometimes have said of himself: "Say 'at my life began at Rivoli,'" as at other times he dated his military career from Toulon.

Forgotten That Never Come to Light.
"I believe," said a country banker, "that at least five per cent. of all notes that go through our banks are forgeries. There is a curiously loose notion as to the crime of forgery, and again and again I have had men propose to sign to a note the name of a neighbor who was at an inconvenient distance. In such cases it was well known that the man whose name was to be forged was willing to go upon the note, but I have no doubt that wealthy men's names are constantly used upon notes that they never saw. The notes are taken up by the payee and nothing is heard of the forgery. For every such forgery detected there are many that never come to light."

TURTLES GOOD TO EAT.

This Country is Blessed with No Less Than Forty Varieties.

Edible turtles of the United States are discussed by a writer in the learned Revue Scientifique. He considers that the gourmets of this country are to be congratulated on the number of all-entirely reptiles at their disposal. No less than forty varieties of edible turtle are known to exist in the United States.

The "loggerhead" is found upon the Atlantic coast from Virginia to Brazil. It is a giant that weighs from 800 to 1,000 pounds, especially in the south. The eggs form an agreeable dish, but the flesh is good only in the young individuals, since it becomes oily and acquires a musky taste in the adult.

It is the green turtles that furnish the greater part of the true turtle meat. These are the turtles par excellence. In the Atlantic they are met with from New York to Florida.

Small at the north they increase in size towards the south, passing from a weight of 8 to 15 and 20 pounds at Charleston to 20 to 25 at St. Augustine, 25 at Halifax river, 50 to 60 at Indian river, and 50 to 100 at Key West. At Cedar Keys specimens have been found that weighed 600, 800 and even 1,000 pounds.

From April to June they repair to the shore in order to deposit their eggs. The Tortugas islands, which are uninhabited and which are visited only by wreckers and turtle fishermen, are one of their favorite haunts, but any desert beach of the coast is equally good for their purposes.

The female creeps up on the shore two or three times, excavates a hole and deposits therein from 100 to 400 eggs (about 500 during the season) and returns to the same place nearly every time, and, on each occasion, covers the eggs with sand in order to conceal the site of the nest.

The sun does the rest, but the seabirds devour many of the young ones, which, as soon as hatched, open a passageway to the exterior and betake themselves to the ocean. The flesh of this species is excellent, and forms the principal ingredient of green turtle soup; and the amateur will tell you that there is nothing so good as the "callpash," the flesh mixed with green fat that is found under the carapace.

The yellowish "callpash" of the plastic is good, too, but the callpash is certainly better, either in soup or broiled. This meat is sold in the large cities, both in a fresh and preserved state.

QUITE AN ADVENTURE.

Prince Hohenlohe Comes Within an Aes of Killing Baron Vietinghoff.

It would be difficult to find on record a stranger hunting adventure than that experienced by Prince Hohenlohe, son of the German chancellor, and Baron Vietinghoff the other day, says the Berlin correspondent of the New York Sun. They went out together to shoot stags and agreed to decoy the animals by imitating their call on a special horn. The hunters separated, each accompanied by a gamekeeper, and went in different directions. During the course of the day they approached each other, and each heard the other's decoy call and believed a stag was before him. Imitating the heavy steps of the animal, they noisily drew still nearer. The imitation of the steps and call was so well done that they finally arrived within ten paces of each other without perceiving their mistake. The thicket was so dense that they could not see through it. Both stood still, repeating the challenge from time to time. Each still firmly believed that he was within a few paces of a real stag. At last the prince, tired of waiting, fired three rapidly in the direction of the supposed game. The first bullet glanced off the cartridge belt of Baron Vietinghoff, the second struck his watch and sprang off, and the third fell dead from his pocketbook well filled with papers. The young baron, dinged hit three times, stood unwounded. He was so convinced that not his fellow hunter but a stag stood before him that he attributed the shots to the explosion of cartridges in his belt, and busied himself unfastening his belt for the purpose of throwing it away. The astonishment of both, when they at last found out what had happened, was great.

ELECTRICAL DESPOTISM.

The State Custodian of the Dynamite Works in the Whipland in Corea.

Coreans appear to be a happy go lucky people. Their wants are few, and they buy little, but the one object of their life is to defer the evil day of payment as long as possible. The coin of the common people is the copper or brass "cash" or sapek, a thousand of which goes to the Mexican dollar. These little coins have a square hole in the center and are strung on cords of straw, and it is said that when a traveler journeys into the interior of the country he has to take along an extra horse to carry his money. It is related that Dr. Soran, a medical missionary, sold to the Korean government eighteen hundred Mexican dollars, and the "cash" he received in exchange required the services of fifty-six stout men for its removal to the mission house. Under such circumstances it appears rather unfortunate to be paid one's last dues.

There is an official, however, who suffers no inconvenience either from the national shiftlessness or the unavailability of the common currency. In Corea, at all events, the state electrician has the whip hand. Not only is he the only European not paid by the customs who gets his pay regularly, but he is paid either in bullion or gold dust. The secret of his "pull" is that the king and all his court are all so afraid of ghosts that they sit up all night. There are sorcerers, and the electric light, also, to keep off the ghosts. If the electrician's pay falls into arrears the light apparatus breaks down, and cannot be repaired until he is paid up.
