THE SULTAN AROUSED

Will Send 120,000 Troops Against the Kurds.

Even This Great Force May Be Unable to Cope with the Lawless Mountaineers—Their Outrages on the Increase—Turkey Hampered by Lack of Money.

Constantinople, Nov. 12.—The lawlessness of the Kurds in the Eastern provinces has grown measurably since the demands for reforms were made upon the sultan by Great Britain, France and Russia. The sultan's evident inclination to refuse to grant the demands, or at least to defer giving a definite answer to the representative of the powers, encouraged the Kurds to believe that the sultan tacitly supported them in their attacks upon the Armenians. Color has been lent to this belief by the action of the sultan in giving good service decorations to several officials who are notorious in favor of exterminating the Armenians and who gave their sanction to the massacres that have led Turkey to the verge of dismemberment. The Kurds have assumed such an attitude of disregard of all authority that it is believed here that the officials are now powerless to stop them from continuing their massacring and pillaging.

Anarchy in the Eastern Provinces.

Advices from the eastern provinces show that the condition of anarchy is such that a very strong force will have to be employed if any progress at all is to be made against the Kurds. The Porte apparently understands this fact, for it is announced to-day that 120,000 troops will be sent against the Kurds. Should the latter offer resistance it is doubtful if even this force would be sufficiently strong to cope with the Kurds, whose intimate knowledge of the mountainous country would stand them in good stead in opposing the Turkish troops.

Turkey in Need of Money.

In spite of the bad financial condition of the government, which is now in arrears in the pay of the reserves already called out, it has been decided to summon more of the reserves for service. It is doubtful if the government's scheme can be effected owing to the scarcity of money, but, at any rate, the attempt will be made, owing to the continued demands of the powers that the Porte restore order forthwith.

Whole Districts Devastated.

Stories of the ravages committed by the Kurds continue to be received here. It is said that in Erzerum and Sivas whole districts have been devastated by the marauding Kurds. A traveler who has arrived at Trebizond from Erzerum states that when he was approaching Bayburt he met 300 women, who in their extremity knelt before him and implored protection, declaring that their husbands, fathers and brothers had been killed and that there were no males of their race who could save them from either dishonor or death.

Revolt of the Druses.

The revolt of the Druses in Hauran is assuming a most serious aspect. The agitation against the authorities is extending and the rebels are gaining many accessions. An official dispatch received here has been made public, which, thanks to the energetic measures that have been taken by the imperial officials, the disturbances and revolts which occurred in certain provinces of Asia Minor, and which had their origin in the seditious intrigues of Armenian agitators, have been everywhere suppressed and order restored in all the districts which were recently the scene of riots and conflicts. Measures have been taken to ensure that peace will be maintained.

There was a large crowd at the court house to see Shea when he arrived. He came in the custody of Warden Thayer of Clinton prison; Sheriff Collins of Troy and another Troy officer, and two powerful keepers from Clinton prison. Shea was resentenced by Justice Edwards. The sentence was that he be electrocuted at Clinton prison during the week commencing Dec. 23, 1895. FRANCISCO SCHLADER.

A New "Divine Healer" with Thousands of Faithful Followers.

Francisco Schlader, the healer, called by many "the Messiah," who has been creating so much excitement in Denver, claims that he has been ordered to Chicago, and that he will appear in that city November 16 to divide with Brother Dowie the notoriety that will result from divine healing.

Schlader, footsore, lame and weary, wandered into Denver from across the mountains and desert wastes between southern California and Mexico, from one or the other of which he is supposed to have journeyed.

He is a man about six feet tall, of German extraction, and heavily built. He is possessed of wonderful powers of endurance, for he tramped across the terrible Mojave desert in southern California, bare-headed and without food, for forty days, the time consumed in making the trip over the desert.

He holds receptions in the yard of Alderman Fox's residence at Denver every day from nine o'clock in the morning until four in the evening, stopping only an hour for dinner. From three thousand to five thousand people come to him every day to be cured of their diseases by the laying on of his hands, which he does while murmuring a short prayer, with eyes uplifted, in a most devout and solemn manner.

He makes no claim whatever to being anything other than a man, who is striving to benefit his fellow men, nor does he make any charge for his services. The crowds gather at his residence from all parts of the state, and remain from sunrise in the morning until after dark at night, all anxious to receive the healing touch. He says he does not know what this mysterious power he possesses is at all, but he feels it to be his duty to do what he can for his fellow men, and he therefore does it. He preaches no sermons, and is as sincere and innocent as a child.

He is not regarded as a fake, but is treated with the utmost consideration by the press and public, who respect him for his simplicity of life, sincerity of purpose, and meekness of manner. He is instilling new life and hope into thousands by his magnetic thrill, and is receiving calls from all over the United States, but claims he must keep his engagement in Chicago.

SKULL OF RICHELIEU.

Recently Brought in Light from Its Resting Place in Paris.

Among the tombs which were violated during the French revolution was that of Richelieu, in the Church of the Sorbonne. The rest of the remains of the famous cardinal were scattered to the four winds, but the head was recovered, and was concealed by a hatter named Cheval.

After the turmoil of the revolution had subsided, Cheval, fearing trouble on account of his theft, confided the skull to Abbe Armez, in whose family he served until 1866. On December 25 of that year the head of the cardinal was solemnly reinterred in the original tomb, opened for the occasion in the presence of M. Duruy, minister of public instruction; Mgrs. Darboy, Maret and Perraud; and of M. Maurice Cottier, member of the upper council of the fine arts, who made the sketch of the skull herewith reproduced from L'illustration.

"The University and the Academy," said M. Duruy on this occasion, "perform a filial duty in joining their homage at the foot of this tomb, which will never again be disturbed."

M. Duruy was mistaken. The tomb of Richelieu has again been disturbed. It was opened in the presence of the French minister of foreign affairs, M. Hanotaux, historian of the cardinal, and the architect of the Sorbonne, M. Nenot, this exhumation having been rendered necessary by the work now in progress on the old church.

Of the head of Richelieu the face alone survives. The rest of the skull has disappeared. The expression of the countenance is striking, for the classical type of the great cardinal is there in admirable preservation.

Only one thing could occasion doubt of its authenticity—namely, the absence of that famous chin beard of which history speaks and which all the painters have depicted.

But even this deficiency may, on the contrary, be taken as proof of genuineness, for in the painting of Philip de Champaigne, representing Richelieu on his deathbed, the dying man wears neither beard nor mustache.

HEAD OF CARDINAL RICHELIEU, [Lately exhumed at the Sorbonne]

FIGHT WITH A BEAR.

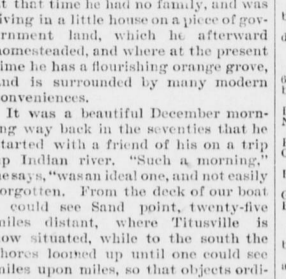

The Man Who Had It Never Wanted Another.

It Was a Hand-to-Hand Encounter and Bruin Had a Good Chance to Win Until He Was Brained by His Pivotal Opponent.

Mr. J. B. Bower, of Coquella, gives an interesting account in the Jackson (Fla.) Times-Union, of a fight he had with a bear a good many years ago. Florida was in a more primitive state in those days, especially the southern coast, where, as now, he lived, though at that time he had no family, and was living in a little house on a piece of government land, which he afterward homesteaded, and where at the present time he has a flourishing orange grove, and is surrounded by many modern conveniences.

It was a beautiful December morning way back in the seventies that he started with a friend of his on a trip up Indian river. "Such a morning," he says, "was an ideal one, and not easily forgotten. From the deck of our boat I could see Sand point, twenty-five miles distant, where Titusville is now situated, while to the south the shores loomed up until one could see miles upon miles, so that objects ordinarily beyond the range of vision could be distinctly seen.

"It was while we were thus admiring beauties of the day that on the island shore a huge black bear came in sight, making his way down a steep ledge of rocks, from which he suddenly tumbled into the water and struck out boldly for the opposite shore, one and a half miles distant. The wind being light it was a matter of impossibility to cut him off with the boat, so running ashore I seized a hatchet I had on board and hastened to the point toward which the bear was heading. Concealing myself, I waited impatiently, planning as best I could my method of attack. Luckily for me, the shore at that place was steep and rocky, and in order to ascend at all the bear was compelled to draw himself up by his forefeet until footing could be had below, and it was while he was thus engaged that I sprang out suddenly, and with all my might endeavored to brain him at a single blow.

"In this, however, I was not successful, and received in return a slap upon the arm that sent my weapon flying from my grasp, and before I had time to look or think old Bruin was upon his back in the water below, having been unable to sustain his weight while warding off my blow. I shall not forget the ugly teeth and jaws and blood-shot eyes as now, with desperate rage, he turned upon me. For a second I wished I had not come, and with desperate haste I clutched a light wood limb I found at my feet. Just what transpired I can hardly tell, but in the end I know I brained that bear. My friend, the captain, reached me just in time to see the job completed. I have killed lots of them and have stood my ground in the face of desperate foes, but never in my life did I fight for life as during the struggle with that bear, for when the fighting was over and old Bruin lay dead at the foot of the cliff I found myself almost destitute of clothing and covered with wounds and bruises.

"I need not tell you that I have had no desire from that day to this to try another hand-to-hand scuffle with a bear. The stories of their cowardice as related by old hunters to the contrary notwithstanding, for when once cornered and rendered furious with a desire to escape, their pugilistic qualities, with which nature has freely endowed them, render them at once the most difficult to overcome and dangerous to encounter, and I would be willing to venture the assertion, as I remember saying at the time, that no pugilist ever lived that could anticipate the movement of a bear, and if once fairly on his feet to strike, or even touch, him is more than any mortal man could ever do. Well, we skinned the old fellow and had meat and oil enough to last the whole winter. His skin I used for a bed when out upon camping expeditions, and many a pleasant nap I took upon the shaggy cast that was once worn by the most ferocious brute I ever met."

Setting a Difficult Point.

A lawsuit has taken place in a Russian city in which German is the prevailing language. A man sued another to recover fifty rubles, the debtor having promised to return the money on St. Henry's day. Having failed to do so for a long time, the lender discovered that the Russian Orthodox church includes no such saint as St. Henry. The judge before whom the case was tried was much puzzled as to the proper verdict. The idea finally occurred to him that, saint or no saint, All Saints' day included even the most doubtful, so he gave judgment that the rubles must be returned on next All Saints' day.
