All the air with love is laden,
 Where the Yule logs glow and flame,
 Hopeful youth and trustful maiden,
 Softly chant the Master's name.
 Now, if there be any sad ones,
 Bid their tearful eyes be dried,
 Now, if there be thoughtless glad ones,
 Be that gladness purified;
 For the bells of peace are ringing,
 Chiming anthems of the free,
 Earth and Heaven join in singing
 Of the stories yet to be.
 Seek the boughs, so green and fragrant,
 Let the wexen tapers dance,
 Here is hope for prairie, for vagrant,
 Christ of every circumstance!
 Pile the leaping fagots higher,
 Let the wide-mouthed chimneys roar
 Clash the cymbals, twang the lyre,
 Angels wait at every door.
 Soft the Day of Peace is breaking;
 Gladdest day of all the year,
 And sweet Plenty, want of wanting,
 Spreads a feast of love and cheer.

On the evening before Christmas, in the year of grace 1894, Mr. Rufus Bell created a mild sensation at his home by arriving with a parcel of huge dimensions. He made sure that none of the children were about the house before he entered and, when he had crossed the threshold he immediately concealed the mysterious bundle in a closet and locked the door upon it.
 Mrs. Bell at once demanded an explanation, and her niece, Miss Rose Mayne, seconded the demand strongly; thereupon Mr. Bell struck the attitude popular with candidates when they say "My fellow-countrymen, and said:
 "Ladies, I am human, singular as the statement may seem; but I am nevertheless a being of ideas and resources."
 "We are always acquiring information," interrupted Mrs. Bell.
 "Rose," continued Mr. Bell, serenely, turning to the younger lady, "as a school-teacher you must have studied juvenile human nature, and you must have been shocked by the fact that children cease to believe in the good old stories of Santa Claus and his reindeer almost as soon as they are able to walk; in fact, I have heard you comment upon this sad truth. What is Christmas to a child, if the child doesn't believe in Santa Claus? Where are all the romance and poetry of the occasion? My own children are skeptical when I tell them the charming legend of Kris Kringle; I have undertaken to convince them that there is a Santa Claus in a person."
 This announcement naturally pleased the ladies; and their excitement was quite intense when Mr. Bell produced a bundle from the closet and opened it, producing a lot of ancient furs and a bearskin hat that had probably been used by a drum major of the town band; to please the ladies he donned his costume at once, and they voted him a perfect Santa Claus, as he certainly was.
 "Now," he said, when he had resumed his ordinary raiment, "I don't think it quite fair to reserve this entertainment for our own children exclusively, so I have invited a few good little boys and girls of the neighborhood; and Mr. and Mrs. Brewster will be here, and young Mr. Moon; I will let them into the secret. You will tell the children to hang their hosiery in the north room, and inform them that you have reason to believe that they may see Santa Claus if they sit up and keep perfectly still: at the proper time I'll ascend the roof and slide down the chimney; it is just large enough for the purpose. And I guess that's all."

 During the balance of the evening, until nine o'clock, there was a great deal of active preparation in progress in the Bell mansion; the north room was tidied, and a semi-circle of chairs placed for the expected guests, who began to arrive at the stipulated time. Mr. Bell was in a fine frenzy of excitement; he declared to his wife, in a whisper, that he felt like a boy again, and she replied that she was ten years younger than she was before he unfolded his delicious scheme. By half-past nine all the guests, large and small, were in their places; Mr. Moon, a young man who had been studying law for ten years, and who hoped soon to be admitted to the bar, sat next to Miss Rose, upon whose hand he had serious designs, and his efforts to appear at ease were amusing and instructive. Mr. Brewster, who was small and timid looking, nestled beside his wife, who was massive and had a bass voice; silence brooded over the throng until Mr. Bell, who was given to speeches, went into another attitude, and said:
 "Children, I have heard that you don't believe there is a Santa Claus? You have formed the unworthy idea that your parents and friends fill your stockings on Christmas eve, and that good old fur-clothed Santa is a myth. Now, I have here a letter from Santa."
 (Great excitement among the children.)
 "And he says that he will arrive here at ten o'clock, coming down the chimney which you see before you. I must leave you for awhile, as I must keep watch outside; but you must all be quiet and keep your seats, or Santa Claus may become angry, and refuse to enter."
 Ten o'clock was announced by the tall clock in the adjoining room, and the mellow chimes of that ancient timepiece had scarcely died away before the children heard other sounds. Up overhead there was a violent scratching and tearing, as though a poorly shod reindeer was trying to climb the roof, and they distinctly heard the silvery tinkling of bells, and some of them believed that they could make out the grinding of the sleigh runners on the shingles. It was a moment of awful excitement; Johnnie Bell, who had never quailed in danger's stormy hour, did not try to conceal the cold perspiration that stood on his forehead; Amelia Grimm, whose shall do it or not. The last time I proposed to you, you refused me, as usual. If you'll promise to marry me, I'll rescue your uncle; if you won't, I leave this town forever—and your uncle in the chimney. His kicks are growing feeble and labored; I don't think he can last more than three minutes."

 The young lady leveled a glance of scorn at him that should have withered him, but he stood firm. He felt that his whole future was at stake, and reflected that all's fair in love and war. There was a stern, cold silence for a minute or two. Meanwhile the vibrations of Santa's legs became desultory and spasmodic, and his muffled groans betokened extreme exhaustion.
 "Wretch!" cried the young lady, at last, "rescue my uncle! You shall have the reward you ask."
 The wretch bowed with noble grace and a moment later was on the roof, with a rope in his hand; he let the rope down the chimney, and called to Santa Claus to grasp it and hang on. Santa did so, and toiled upward while Mr. Moon pulled; after 15 minutes of distressing work, Santa emerged from the chimney, a poor, battered elf of himself.
 Mr. Moon assisted him to the ground and into the house, where the children and the other guests crowded about him and laughed; for children always laugh when they ought to weep.
 When Mr. Bell was recovered sufficiently, he leaned against the back of a chair—he was too weak for an attitude—and said:
 "Children, if you tell about this around town, I'll have you all arrested and sent to the penitentiary for life. And you, Johnnie, for that titter I'll make you saw a cord of green wood. I want you all to go home and tell your parents that Santa Claus is the biggest hoax of the 19th century, and I'll guarantee every word you say."
 By careful nursing Mr. Bell was restored to his normal health in a few days, and his first act was to have the old chimney taken down.
 One day in March Mr. Moon led his bride to the altar; he held his head high and his eye sparkled. After the ceremony there was a dinner at Mr. Bell's residence, and Mr. Bell himself was radiant with good humor and hospitality. He called the young couple aside, and indulged in an attitude and a speech:
 "My beloved ones," he began, "the morning of life opens radiant to you; sunlight glimmers upon the waters, there are blue skies overhead, and—er—the robin redbreasts are twittering on the boughs. But dark days of tempest and storm may come; rolling waves may threaten your bark, and then remember that if you need a helping hand, you may call upon Rufus Bell."
 Mr. Moon looked dreamily out of the window.
 "May I ask a favor of you now?" he asked.
 "A hundred of them, my dear boy."
 "Well, I see it's snowing, and there's enough on the ground to make sleighing. Will you lend us your reindeer and sled for awhile?"
 Santa Claus Stockings.
 Said Santa Claus on Christmas eve,
 In jolly, good, fat glee;
 To judge by all these stockings here,
 They've turned the hose on me.

EVERYBODY CROWDED ABOUT MR. BELL.
