AT THE STATE CAPITAL.

WEEK'S WORK OF THE LEGISLA TURE REVIEWED BY NISSLEY.

Leading Question Before the Law-makers—Dr. Swallow's Charges May Bring Out Inside History.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 6, 1897.
The question that is causing the most concern at present, of course, is the building of a new capitol. The manner of providing revenue is the main point involved. Chairman Marshall, of the involved. Chairman Marshall, of the appropriation committeee, has prepared an estimate of the revenues available, together with the sums of money that have been asked for charities and for the ordinary running expenses of the commonwealth. He finds that the total available revenue for 1898 and 1859 is $19,000,000, and that the total amount of money saked for in the appropriate. $19,000,000, and that the total amount of money asked for in the appropriation bills presented up to date amounts to $28,561,720. How to make these two extremes meet is the problem that confronts the legislature. In the estimates of money asked no reference is made to to the cost of a new capitol, which will also have to come from somewhere. Among the most prominent Pennsylvanians who confered with the governor, last week, was Andrew Carnegie,

Among the most prominent Pennsylvanians who confered with the governor, last week, was Andrew Carnegle, the millionaire, of Pittsburg. He said he thought it too bad that a great state ilike ours was not able to berrow a deliar to meet such an emergency as the destruction of its capital, but stated that he was ready to advance a portion of the money needed to put up the buildings. Governor Hastings said there were many others who volunteered to do the same thing Mr. Carnegle offered, but that he had some plans to offer which may render a call upon the citizens of the state unnecessary. Governor Hastings is being made the subject of very many complimentary remarks, at present, for the way he is proceeding in the matter.

Rev. Dr. S. C. Swallow, editor of the Pennsylvania Methodist, in this city, in his paper last week made serious charges against a number of citizens, and not legislators or state officials, be appointed to investigate these charges. The preacher-editor very likely did not expect that his article would create such a forore as it did. The charges of corruption were sweeping, and the state officials at once took the matter up. Dr. Swallow claimed that the capitol fire was not purely accidental, and he was called before the legislative investigation committee to testify. This he refused to do until he consulted his informant. A hearing was held and the editor held for court.

The officials have retained eminent counsel, and it is understood Dr. Swallow children was been proved did not the editor held for court.

The officials have retained eminent counsel, and it is understood Dr. Swallow will not be far behind with brilliant legal lights. This suit, I believe, will investigate. If the anti-Quayites are back of Dr. Swallow, they have kept it very quiet so far, but at any rate there will be strong power brought to assist Dr. Swallow in his defense. This trial will go farther towards clearing up the cloud of dishonesty that is constantly being heard about public officials than all the investigations that will be held during the session.

Anthracite Coal Frade.

The anthracite coal trade is marked by the usual uneasiness that precedes the announcement of spring prices. Dealers hold off and are taking the smallest possible quantities of coal, in some cases two retailers clubbing together in the purchase of a small cargo. Individual operators are cutting prices 25 cents a ton and some of the companies are doing the same thing. The New York trade is waiting for the announcement of spring prices, which is expected the later part of the month.
