GRAND ENTERTAINMENT.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL PUPILS SCORE ANOTHER BIG SUCCESS

Grand Opera House Filled to the Doors on Tuesday Evening With People Who Came to Witness the Brilliant Work of the Convent Scholars.

The pupils of St. Ann's parochial schools gave their fifth annual entertainment at the Grand opera house on Tuesday evening before an audience which completely filled the building. It has become customary, at the close of each school term, for the talented young pupils of the convent schools to give an entertainment the like of which is not seen at any other time of the year, nor entertainment the like of which is not seen at any other time of the year, nor equalled by any other than themselves. Their yearly exercises have become a feature among the amusements of the town, and are attended by more people than any other similar enterprise during the year. The church basement can no longer house the throngs, and the Grand opera house, the largest building in town, is taxed to its utmost to accommodate the attendents, and this for two modate the attendents, and this for two nights.

The high standard set by the first entertainment given five years ago in the church basement, has been fully maintained, and Tuesday evening's production cannot help but add to the already great popularity of the pupils. The Sisters of Mercy, whose patient and laborious work was so brilliantly reflected by their pupils, cannot be accorded too much praise for the success of the exercises, for from the standpoint of one in the audience the character of their work was made evident and was proven to be admirable.

To analyze each number on the programme for the purpose of showing wherein it was pleasing, would be unnecessary, as the conclusion would be the same in every case, and may be ex-The high standard set by the first en

John Markle's name appears in the New York Tribune's Fresh Air Fund list this week. He is credited with donating $160 to pay the expenses of this worthy charity. Mr. Markle originally intended to bring fifty of the children here and provide for them at his own expense, but this was changed, and the amount required to provide the fare and necessary articles for this number for two weeks has been sent direct to the managers of the fund. It is expected, however, that several of the children which are bound for Freeland will be located here.

The New School Building.
Contractor Riebe has a force of thirtyfive men working on the new school at Chestnut and Washington streets. The brick and stone work of the structure has reached the second story. On Tuesday an accident occurred which will delay work on the front portion for a week or work on the front portion for a week more. While one of the large browstones was being hoisted to its position over the north side window of the main entrance, it split in two and fell to the ground. The store was probably a defective one, as an examination of it shows considerable brittleness, and it is fortunate that it gave out at the time, otherwise it might have escaped notice and give trouble some future day. All the other parts of the building show good workmanship.

On Tuesday evening the directors met with Architect Davey to hear his report on the building. He pronounced the work done so far to be even better than demanded by the specifications. The board accepted his statements, but will continue its vigilance until the school is completed.

Enama was a very intelligent Tyroler and was considered a sound business man by the people here. He was treasurer of a prominent Tyrolese society of Freeland, which loses quite an amount.
