A SPRY MAINE GIRL

A SPRY MAINE GIRL.

Works Her Father's Dairy Farm, and When Grown Will He a Doctor. All the way from East Orrington to Bangor the people are talking about and praising Sarah Curran, the 16-year-old daughter of Nick Curran, a dairy farmer. Curran has been confined to the house by rheumatic fever for six weeks, and every morning Sarah has been up at three o'clock to do the chores. When site and her mother have milked 18 cows and put them to pasture, she cats her breakfast, and by the time the other milkmen are getting up she is on the milk eart on her way to Bangor. When she has gone over a good part of the city, supplying customers with milk in pint and quart lots, she turns the horse for home, arriving there in time to take dinner. In the afternoon she attends to the farm work and does other tasks that usually devolve upon a man. After supper she helps to milk the 18 cows and goes to bed early, to get a good start the next morning.

bed early, to get a good start the next morning.

Though she does the work of a man, she is not at all mannish in her ways, being of slight frame and very modest. Until she left school two years ago to help her father on the farm she was considered the brightest pupil in her class. Since then most of her life has been passed outdoors. She has driven a pair of horses to haul cordwood to market, taking it from the stump in the ferest to the dooryard of her customers and unloading it without trouble. She says that when she reaches 18 years of age—by which time her father ought to be well-to-do—she is going away to school and take a course in some college that grants equal privileges to both sexes. After getting educated she proposes to become a doctor.

HEART TROUBLES AGAIN.

TONY VISCONTE IS UNFORTUNATE IN

Her Place Now Marries Another-No Boarders Need Apply After He Makes His Next Conquest.

Sandella Carro and Miss Antonetta Condena, both of Freeland, were married fon Tuesday morning.

Back of the above brief announcement is a story. To begin at the beginning the reader may remember of an elopement at Harleigh four years ago. Most likely the elopement is not remembered. It was not in high society, nor even in the middle strata. The principals were part of the Italian colony in the little cosmopolitan town southwest of us. Tony Visconte and his wife lived contentedly together in this classical hamlet until the summer of 1893. In July of that year Joe Margetna, who was taken in as a boarder the winter before, had succeeded, as the divorce lawyers say, "in alienating the affections" of his landlord's hitherto faithful spouse, and when Tony remonstrated the pair hied themselves to parts unknown, leaving a little two-year-old boy to grow up and call in vain for "mamma."

Tony mourned for awhile. His faith in womanhood was not shatteed, however. A black-eyed beauty came to flarleigh from the sunnyl and across the sea, and he laid siege to her heart with all the ardor a grass widower possesses. His charms at length prevailed, and Antonetta Condena consented to fill the void in Tony's home.

But Tony was a busy man. He had no From the Seraton Nows.

His charms at length prevailed, and Antonetta Condena consented to fill the void in Tony's home.

But Tony was a busy man. He had no time to concern himself with either the civil or religious ceremonies to which men and women are expected to conform before they become husband and wife. Neither did Antonetta care. Both felt secure of the other's love, and so matters drifted on till the spring of '97. Life to them was 'tone grand sweet song," as the dreaming poets put it.

But Tony was also ambitions. The circumscribed limits of Harleigh were too confining for him. He aspired to become a business man. Where could he tests his talents better than in Freeland, thought he, and here he came. On Ridge street, a short distance below Loouth, they took up their residence. Soon the family of three was increased by two additions. A little babe came to bless this unblessed home. The arrival of the child was followed by that of a woarder, Sandeila Carro, who was eking tout a precarious living in the mines at Highland.

Tony bided his time. His opportunity

Tony bided his time. His opportunity to embark in business finally came. The opening of the huckleberry season gave him the chance of his life—and he embraced it. He bought and sold the wild fruit and froze on to many of the pennies that passed to and fro between the picker and the jobber. Antonetta's love was with him all the while, at least to all appearances. Indeed, her promptings to become something more than a stripping digger spurred him to go deeper into the venture.

The berry season was a prosperous stripping digger spurred him to go deeper into the venture.

The berry season was a prosperous one. Tony bought the product of his country-people's toil in the woods and disposed of it to Hazleton jobbers—always at a figure which gave him a neat margin for profit. The business grew and expanded like a Kansas sunflower. It kept him from Antonetta's side many hours in every twenty-four, and, strange as it may read, absence, in this instance, did not make the heart grow fonder—at least not on the part of milady.

Work in Highland mines lagged and languished in inverse proportion to the increase in the huckleberry business. Sandella's enforced idleness gave him many hours to while away, and as he watched Antonetta's deft hands perform the household duties he became smitten with her charms. His honeyed words lords, and secretly they planned their schemes.

In the meantime Tony was not so blind as the lovers thought. He knew the meaning of the symptoms of discontent which appeared in the behavior of the pair. His previous experience stood him well. He meditated on the matter for some time, and finally concluded to serve notice on the easy-going Carro that board in some other domicile should be sought. He intended to deliver his ultimatum on Monday evening.

The delay was fatal. The plans of Sandella and Antonetta were laid well. During Tony's absence at Hazleton on Monday application was made for a marriage license. The law's questions were satisfactorily answered, and the privilege to legally become one was granted them.

in the morning was confirmed.

Homeward rushed the twice-deserted man, and to soothe his wounded feelings he fired a half-dozen shots from a revolver out of his second-story window. The neighbors thought the vendetta was declared on, but this was not so. Sandella and his bride-to-be were safely ensconeed in a nearby house. The shooting attracted a crowd, but the volley caused no blood-letting.

Then Tony went to bed, and after a night's good rest he reappeared—a lonlier but a wiser man. There were still some traces of the previous evening's bitterness in him, but kind friends persuaded him to forego the pleasure of killing Sandella and he reluctantly consented.

But Long hefere, Tony, had risen the huckleberry buyer's love.

Miners under Markle & Co. are complaining of the severe rules under which they are compelled to labor. The slightest deviations from the commands of the management are followed by orders to make a pilgrimage to the "office," where appologies must be tendered in a slavelike manner to the superintendent. It is galling to men with independent spirits to be subjected to the whims of one whose authority is greater than his capability, and the miners of No. 5 have appropriately christened that colliery "Siberia." It might also be remarked, for the benefit of the gentleman who is said to be responsible for many of the irksome regulations, that a change of policy in treating the employes ought to be tried. There are dangerous elements in the coal fields now, and Siberian methods are bound to breed nihilistic notions.

Young Man Kuled at Highland.

John Wackley, a sixteen-year-old boy of Highland, received injuries in the mines on Tuesday from the effects of which he died early yesterday morning. The boy was employed as a patcher in No. 2 colliery and feil between cars, which crushed his body severely and injured him internally. He was removed to the home of his father, Theobald Wackley, but in spite of all the medical care that could be given him he expired at 2 o'clock next morning.

The funeral takes place tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made in St. Ann's cemetery.

Arrested for Perjury.

C. R. Gordon, a photographer of Alderson, this county, was arrested at the court house Tuesday morning on a charge of perjury, the circumstances of the case being of a very musual nature.

Gordon, who is a married man 42 years old, is charged with going to the office of Register II. P. Kuntz in the court house on July 7 and securing a marriage license by perjury. It is alleged Gordon gave the name of J. D. Gallop, is swore he was not married and when he received the license gave it to a young man named J. D. Gallop, of Alderson, who was but 18 years old, and the latter married a girl of his own age, using the marriage license procured by Gordon. It is also said that Gallop, fearing the marriage was illegal, went to Tunkhannock, some time later, secured another license and was married a second time to assure himself that the knot was properly tied. Gordon was held under $500 bail.
