bring back the paper which the banker would give to me in return. Of course I should have understood, young as I was, that the pocketbook was valuable, and I should also have obeyed my father's instructions to go as directly as possible and to hurry back.

"I did neither of these things. Of course I took Theodore along with me, and being a very small boy, of course I loitered along at my leisure, and when Theodore and I got about half way to the village we turned aside from the road into the thick growth of the swampy woods. For hours we played in the shade of the water ashes and the willows, jumping from bog to bog in the more swampy parts and chasing butterflies in occasional glades. Finally, when the sun was half way down the western sky, I remembered my errand and we continued on our way to the village.

"I reached the little bank just before the hour for closing, and marching up to the little window put my hand into my pocket to take out the wallet. But it wasn't there, and I had to explain to the banker that I had lost it in the swamp. I have passed through many greater crises since then, but I am sure I never felt more completely cast down than I did when I heard from the lips of the banker that the lost book had contained the incomprehensible sum of sloo. I was literally overwhelmed with grief, and I readily agreed to the banker's impassioned declarations regarding my utter personal worthlessness.

"Of course I retraced my steps through the swampy woods as carefully as I could in search of the missing book. Of course I retraced my steps through the swampy woods as carefully as I could in search of the missing book. Of course I retraced my steps through the swampy woods as carefully as I could hardly see, and when night come on I had to give it up. I will pass over the details of the interview that took place between my father and me. A stout leathern strap and its application were among the chief features thereof, and I was so absorbed in my own grief and pain that I failed to notice that Theodore had n

"It was some time after I awoke the frightful thing that I remembered the frightful thing that had befallen me, the first marks morning, that I remembered the frightful thing that had befallen me, the first marks of a certain farmhouse in one of the most highly-honored inmates of a certain farmhouse in one of the central counties of my room locked, and it came back to me. I remembered then that my indicate the first marked for me is almost blind, more than half deaf, his teeth are falling out, and his once glossy black hair is now plentifully sprinkled with gray, "Theodore" is a dog, the companion of his master's boyhood days and his most cherished pet in the present period of canine scalility. most as he got his eyes open; we were friends from the very first, and as soon as the dog was old enough to keep up with me we were together constantly from sunrise till sunset.

"Before Theodore was six months old he showed unusual intelligence. I thought then, and I think now, that Theodore understood the English Ianguage much better than some of the two-legged creatures who speak it. So firmly was this borne in on my childish mind that I used to devote a good deal of time trying to teach the poor creature to speak. You may laugh if you want to, but I believe that dog knew I was trying to teach him to speak. He used to look up into my eyes with the most wistful expression imaginable on his poor old black face, and his futile whinings and barkings sometimes went to my very heart. But after awhile I became satisfied that my efforts were vain and for this reason, quite as much as because of the jeers and gibes to which they subjected me. I left of trying.
"It was when Theodore was six or seven years old—quite an old og in fact—and I was about ten, that, being very busy with his farm work, my father sent me to the village one day with $100 in a pocketbook with which to pay off a note that was in the hands of the local banker. My father made the mistake of not telling me what was in the pocketbook, taking great care to Carolus Duran has returned to Paris from London, where he had been painting the portrait of Lady Warwick, formerly Lady Brooke. M. Duran, it is said, was highly complimented on his work by the prince of Wales.

The new Chinese minister at Washington is a Christian and a member of the Episcopal church. Wu Ling Fang was educated in London and called to the English bar in 1877. He has been made director of Chinese railroads, connected with the negotiations for peace with Japan, legal adviser to the Viceroy Li Hung Chang and other things to his credit.

Baron Thialmann, the hea inchilet.

Barron Thielmann, who has just left the German embassy at Washington to become secretary of the German imperial treasury, was an unusual man in many respects. As an example of his learning it is related that during the Franco-Prussian war, in which he served, he sent reports of various events to his old teacher, all written in Sanskirt. Thus he described Sedan and the capture of Napoleon.
