Character Who Had a Way for Circonventing Inspectors.

Citizens of the Second district of the Fourth ward, says the Rochester (N.
Y) Democrat and Chronicle, are having considerable fun with a well-known character of the vicinity who developed a novel idea of the blanket ballot system of voting, on election day. For the purposes of this narrative the character may be called Tom. He was given a ballot by the election officers, and retired into one of the compartments to make his little cross marks. After remaining in the booth for a time Tom emerged with a self-satisfied air, but empty handed.

"Where's your ballot?" asked as al-

inded.
e's your ballot?" asked an elec-voted it in there; you can't get a sight at my vote."

After a little more argument on the same line an investigation was begun, which resulted in the discovery that Tom had carefully marked his ballot to his own satisfaction, folded it up and slipped it through a crack in the back of the booth. From there it had slipped down into a pile of agricultural implements stored in the place, and it was with no little labor and some difficulty that it was "fished" out and returned to the would-be voter, who, much against his will, was obliged to permit the inspectors to handle it before it was deposited in the box.

When a man "calls" you with a stack of them you must look, for you cannot hear them rattle on the table. The noiseless ships are a boon to players who indulge in a little game in a boarding house room of a Sunday afternoon, says the Kansas City Star. And they are a boon to hotel proprietors who have a room set apart for poker-playing guests. A detective could hold his ear to a keyhole all night without determining whether it was a game of whist or poker that was going or inside. The new poker chips come in red, white and blue colors, and are as flexible as a loser's conscience. The poker room proprietor and Sunday afternoon players have all laid in a supply, and the noisy ivory and celluloid chips, with holes bored in them, will soon begin to do duty as dress buttons.

Such a fundamental question in literature as the following, says Zion's Herald, should not long remain unanswered: "It beats me," he said, as he laid down his newspaper, thoughfully, "I dunno's I ever thought of it before, but now thea'it does come ter my mind, it certainly beats me," "What air ye talking about?" asked his wife, anxiously. "Literatoor," he answered. "Course, we've seen it showed up in the newspapers time and ag'in how all an editor is ter sit down weth a pot o' paste an' a pair of seissors, an' cutout things to put inter 'is paper," "Certainly. I don't see nothin's so beatin' bout that." "But this is the question: Some feller hez ter git them pieces up in the first place. It never struck me afore, but I'm blest of I wou'dn't like ter know who the feller is that starts in an' gits up them there things fur the editors ter cut out."

Contrary Effects of the Absence of One on a Friend of Col. Calliper.

"I knew a man once," said Col. Calliper, according to the New York Sun, a young man who had everything that heart could wish for, who, notwithstanding that fact, was prettysneand sensible sort of young man, but who, nevertheless, did at times, in his younger days, before he had learned the philosophy of life, occasionally have periods of depression. In one of these on his way home once from Europe he came to the conclusion that life wasn't worth living, and he made up his mind to end it all right there by jumping overboard. As he looked over the rail and realized how wet the water was, and how much there was of it, he knew that he ought not to go out in it without a mackintosh.

"Going below he discovered that he had neglected to bring one. On this occasion of all others when he wanted one most he had none. But he couldn't think of encountering the wet inappropriately clad, and so he deferred dumping overboard until he could do so in proper form. Next morning, with the resiliency of youth, he was feeling better, and he arrived in New York buoyant, hopeful and strong.

"And, curiously enough, while in other respects he remained as punctious as ever about his dress, he never after that wore a mackintosh; and he went out in all sorts of weather without hesitation. It was his carclessness in this regard that led finally to death. Dut without a mackintosh; and he went out in all sorts of weather without hesitation, it was his carclessness in this regard that led finally to death. Dut without a mackintosh; and he went out in all sorts of weather without hesitation, it was his carclessness in this regard that led finally to death. Dut without a mackintosh in a heavy rain at the age of 97 he caught a cold that settled on his lungs, developed into pneumonia and carried him off, and so it may be said of my friend that he owed his long life, and his death, to the same cause."

His Bluff Called.

When the young man called to ask for the old man's daughter the latter naturally thought it was necessary to put up a good bluff, that being the usual method of procedure. Consequently, he looked solemn, coughed once or twice as a sort of preliminary, communed with himself a minute or two, coughed again and asked: "Can you support her in the style to which she has been accustomed?"

"If I couldn't," returned the young man promptly, "I ought to be ashamed of myself."
