STRIKERS SHOW SCARS.

SURVIVORS OF LATTIMER MASSACRE EXHIBIT THEIR WOUNDS.

Bullet-Marked Bodies Are Bared in Court as Evidence of the Deputies' Aims. Tragic Marks of the Terrible Slaughter. Raught Accused of Wilful Murder.

On Thursday the first wounded striker was put on the witness stand, and told to show the red scars that marked the track of Winchester bullets. It is the intention of the district attorney to follow with the entire body of more than thirty men who were treated in the Hazleton hospital and were discharged upon recovery. Five months have elapsed since the Lattimer killing. The men who were wounded have resumed their work, barring two under treatment now, and several others who were crippled for life, one having a leg amputated.

The wounds are marked now only by crimson and angry scars on muscular shoulders, arms, legs, chests and backs. As these Hungarians and Poles stripped off their coats, torn with bullet holes, and pulled their coarse shirts they became excited and these scenes were thrilling and pathetic.

The tactics of the prosecution in heaping up evidence by continual repetition of the same story is irritating the defense. Between the great crowd of witnesses for the commonwealth and the long-drawn out cross-examinations of Mr. Lenahan the trial stretches far out into indefinite futurity, and a month is now considered a conservative estimate.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Palmer said to the district attorney, when almost identical stories were following on one another's heels: "What's the use of going over this ground again and again. It has been proved that these men agreed to march peacefully, and apparently they were unarmed at Lattimer."

This was an important admission by one of the leading counsel for the defense.

One of the most important witnesses was Daniel J. Ferry, a tea agent. He saw the strikers going to Lattimer and they acted peacefully as they marched along, carrying in front the American flag. He was about twenty yards distant from the sheriff when he was talking to the strikers at Lattimer. "I heard a volley," he said, "and saw a young man fall near the trolley road. He was shot twice." "Did you know any of the deputies present?" The witness named John Turner, William Raught and Edward Turnbach.

"I saw William Raught get on the bank on the electric railway and shoot after a man running in the direction of the schoolhouse after the volley."

The first of the wounded men introduced was Joseph Zappas, who talked through an interpreter. After telling his story of the shooting he removed his clothing to the waist, and the jury viewed his scars. A hole in his back and another through the left arm showed the course of a rifle ball, which had gone through him obliquely, coming out through the arm. The defense objected to this display, and Mr. Palmer asked if the district attorney proposed to play upon the sympathy of the jury by stripping the thirty-eight wounded men on the witness stand.

The tenor of Mr. Matin's reply indicated that he was ready to strip 3,800 men if he thought it advisable for the interests of the prosecution.

A stocky young Poleander, August Cascaiski, was an intelligent witness who made an admirable stand against a battering cross-examination and emerged with colors flying. He swore that Deputy Dodson struck the man whose arm was broken at West Hazleton.

Joseph Mekki was shot through the arm, and when asked to take off his coat he fairly tore off his upper garments. A Winchester ball had hit his forearm near the elbow from behind, while he was running away, and came out through his upper arm over the biceps. He was very much excited as he bared his arm and shoulder and walked in front of the jury-box. He said: "They said they would shoot us down like dogs when they met us at West Hazleton. At Lattimer the sheriff pointed a pistol at my breast. I turned to run when the guns went crack, crack, and was shot from behind in my right arm. I had run about ten or fifteen yards from the sheriff and was shot while I was running down the road."

Andrew Hanes was shot through the hips by the flanking fire while he was running away. He bared himself and showed the two big scars left by a Winchester ball.

Andrew Lapinski was shot through the shoulder while running, the ball going clear through from behind. He showed the scars. It was very notable that the vitality of these men who toll by sheer strength and muscle is extraordinary, their constitutions amazing. Three of the men on the stand on Thursday had been shot clear through body or shoulder.

The commonwealth, since the beginning, has been endeavoring to introduce the testimony of strikers and spectators who heard deputies make threats, to show malice toward the survivors and the wounded of the blood-soaked scene of the shooting, but the court has repeatedly sustained the objection of the counsel for the defense. The question was raised on Friday by the story of another witness. A striker, Mike Zochak, in the course of his story, was asked: "Did you hear any of the deputies say anything after the shooting?" This was as promptly objected to by the defense. The prosecution offered to prove by this witness that a wounded striker asked for water, and that a deputy was heard to exclaim to him: "We won't give you water. We'll give you —"

Martin Loughran swore that he had seen a deputy kick a striker, Andrew Meier, in his wounded leg, which was afterward amputated. But as the state could not identify this deputy, the statement was objected to.

Thomas Parrish told of the shooting, where a bullet, entering behind the right arm, crashed through bone and tissue until it came out in front.

Matthew Chya was another of those wounded. He swore to this statement: "I was running away up the hill toward the schoolhouse after the volley had been fired. I was about 200 yards from the deputies, or from the road where I had started to escape. Then I heard a single shot, and I felt a bullet go through my shoulder. The rifle bullet passed clean through, coming out in front." The witness showed the two scars to the jury. "I saw two other men shot while they were running away, one in the arm, the other in the leg."

The saddest sight of the trial was a Lithuanian witness, Michael-Julus. He was pale, emaciated, his shoulders bowed and had death in his eyes. He looked the wreck of a man of remarkable physique, strong and muscular above most of his fellows. His dry, racking cough seemed almost to tear his heart out. He stripped his gaiter frame to the waist. A dull red disk, the size of a dime, showed square in the middle of his back, below the shoulder blades. On his chest, just above the heart, was another and a similar scar. A Winchester ball had passed directly through the left lung, putting a hole clean through him from back to chest. The ball entered from behind. It is a miracle that he has lived so long. He has been in the Hazleton hospital for five months. His death was expected daily for weeks. He is now spitting blood most of the time.

Saturday's testimony was without special incident. The first witness, Frank Krupa, of Crystal Ridge, was in the march and told the story again of how the strikers decided to carry no weapons. He ran when the shooting began and saw two others dropped by the deputies while they were trying to escape up the hill. He told a clear story and his evidence could not be shaken by the attorneys for the defense.

Anthony Ganna, 19 years old, submitted his tattered coat as proof of the insults offered the men at West Hazleton, where the thugs tried to induce the strikers to resent the indignities heaped upon them.

Mary Kohler, a domestic of Lattimer, saw the strikers coming. She stated the people of town got afraid when the men were coming. This answer pleased the defense, but their pleasure vanished when she explained that the fear was caused by the rumor that the deputies intended to shoot the miners.

John Petruski testified to seeing the deputies get guns at a hardware store, four blocks west of the Central hotel, in Hazleton. He thought the deputies intended to do harm and followed them to Lattimer. He saw the men murdered.

The jury-men are keeping up their interest in the proceedings with surprising attentiveness. They were given two weeks' pay on Friday by order of the court, as several of them wished to replenish their wardrobe. Each jurymen was paid $25.

POLITICAL PICKUPS.

A Republican pow-wow was held by the borough candidates at DePierro's cafe on Saturday night. The party belted and shouters have been clamoring for money since the nominations were made, and the meeting was called to make arrangements to appease them. The caucus was quite harmonious and the prospects were painted in rosy colors, but the majority of the candidates left the gathering with the same determination as they entered, viz., to take care of No. 1 tomorrow and let the other fellows fight their own battles.

It is said that the mine bosses at several polls in Foster will take a prominent part in the election tomorrow. Some are ranged on the side of the regular Republican ticket and some are working for the Citizens' nominees. If all reports are true, intimidation will be rampant in the township. It is quite possible that a few of these over-zealous bosses will find themselves under arrest before the day is over, if they carry their authority too far.

Foster township ballots are printed without a circle over the Citizens' party column. The voter who wishes to help the independent movement must mark an "X" after each candidate's name. Some of the Citizens' leaders are inclined to believe that their party should have a circle, so that the ticket could be voted with one "X" on top of the column.

Owing to the lengthening of the deputies' trial, the meeting of Pennsylvania Democrats, a call for which is published on the fourth page, will not be held. State Chairman Garman cannot leave the trial, and a Democratic gathering would not be complete without him.

Patrick Marley, of Jeddo, and John Gallagher, of Drifton, candidates for school director and supervisor respectively, should receive handsome majorities in this end of Hazleton township. Both men deserve the solid support of their party.

Freeland Democrats are in good trim for tomorrow's contest. Every ward has been thoroughly organized, the candidates are working in harmony, active and honest men will man the polls
