That this personal property is sold to me, and I have and I warn any and all persons from interfering with the same in any manner whatsoever. JOHN SHIGO.

EDITORS' NOTICE.—Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, auditors of Foster township, will meet at the hotel of Albert Gosper, on Walnut street, in Freeport borough, on Monday, March 7, 1898, at 10 o'clock a. m., to audit the accounts of the township for the past year. PATRICK B. FERRY, Auditors. Freeport, Pa., February 17, 1898.

Hart, the Tailor, Will Remain Here.

Hart, the English tailor, has been unable to secure a suitable location in that section of Philadelphia to which he intended to remove, and after giving the matter due consideration he has finally decided to make Freeport his home. Notwithstanding the fact that preparations were being made by himself and family to leave here, Mr. Hart's business has been steadily increasing during the winter months, and this encouraging sign of the confidence in him of the people of Freeport went a great way in causing him to decide to become a permanent resident of our town. That this decision will be welcome news to the people of the North Side may be depended upon, for in Hart, the English tailor, they have a progressive merchant whose methods are upright and honest and who may be relied upon to stand faithful to every promise he makes to a patron.

For the future he will give particular attention to merchant tailoring. This department of Hart's store has always been in capable hands, but hereafter it will be the leading feature of the establishment. In the meantime his entire lot of ready-made clothing will be disposed of at a sacrifice. Room must be had for the stock of spring clothes which is coming, and for the present any reasonable offer for suits, pants, etc., will be taken.

MURDER WAS PROVEN.

TESTIMONY STAMPS DEPUTIES AS A GANG OF MAN-KILLERS.

Prosecution Has Closed Its Side in the Lattimer Trial—Awful Evidence of the Havoc Wrought by Winchester Strikers in Court—A Free Land Witness.

The case for the commonwealth against the Lattimer deputies closed on Saturday, and public opinion emphatically declares that a clear charge of willful murder has been indisputably proven by the prosecution against several of the accused men. Regardless of the legal rights of the sheriff in the premises, the testimony of dozens of witnesses has shown that premeditated and deliberate murder was committed during and after the general slaughter, and while judge and jury may whitewash this bloody crime, the stain on the characters of some of these deputies will remain in the public's eyes as a brand to mark the men of this region who under the guise of law have assassinated many of their fellow-creatures.

The defense will open today, and the opening argument will be made by Geo. S. Ferris, after which the first of a hundred or more witnesses will be put on the stand. At least two more weeks will pass before the end of the trial.

The last days of the prosecution's side of the case were dramatic. Never since the trial began have the barbarous cruelties of Sheriff Martin and his inhuman thugs been more graphically recited; never have the awful effects of Winchester bullets been so horribly demonstrated.

Into the court room Thursday afternoon came four men carrying a fifth man in a chair. Up the aisle the human burden was borne and down in front of the witness box it was deposited. Then in a tone of voice scarcely above a whisper, John Gusperik was sworn. He was the victim of a bullet that crashed through his skull and imbedded itself in his brain, leaving him a hopeless paralytic.

"I saw Sheriff Martin approaching us at Lattimer," Gusperik feebly declared. "Then he disappeared, and his men began to shoot. I tried to run, but a bullet struck me, and I fell down. I can't see well now, and every time I move my head I feel something rattle in there. I am unable to raise my arms or legs, and they tell me I will never be any better."

Here Gusperik was carried to the jury box, where a jurymen stuck his finger into the wound at the back of the poor fellow's head while he, without changing countenance, for he had no pain, lay lamblike in the arms of his supporters. The gory possession of victims then moved on and into the box. Tattered John Slobodnik, wrapped in a heavy overcoat, was next. Slobodnik's head also contained a bullet, and the doctors at the University of Pennsylvania hospital, in Philadelphia, who located the bullet with the X-rays, say that he will die the minute it is removed.

Slobodnik showed the jury the scar, and after declaring that he ran at the first shot, but did not get far, was assisted back to the witness room.

Angelo Matz, an Italian rag-picker, who joined the strikers simply because he wanted to see what was going on, told a ghastly tale and illustrated it with the aptness of an artist.

"I heard the shooting," he said through an interpreter, "a man was shot and fell into the gutter. He tried to get up and go away, but I saw a deputy run up to him and putting a rifle to his back send several more bullets into him. Then he laid still."

"Show us how the deputies aimed," commanded District Attorney Martin, giving Matz a rifle. He straightened up. He was a soldier and his eyes glistened with delight. Quickly bringing the piece from an order to a ready, Matz swept the first six rows of the deputies with the blue barrel, and the cowards, hitherto unmoved by the sight of the wounds they inflicted, quailed as the barrel was pointed at them.

Casper Mozer is destined to hobble through life with a stiff leg, as the result of the wound he received at Lattimer. Upon the stand he bared his knee and showed the jury where a rifle ball had ground its way through that member, leaving a scar 2 1/2 by 1 1/2 inches in size.

John Hryzo, when fleeing from the wrath of the deputies, saw men falling like straw and turned to see what the deputies were doing, when he received a bullet through both legs.

John Kulk, a little shaggy-headed Pole, whose home is at Harwood, swore that the deputies robbed as well as shot him. The witness wore the same coat that he had on during the shooting and he showed the bullet hole. He also displayed the scar made on his side by the wound.

Two bullets pierced Constantine Manoski, one at the right ankle and the other his thigh. The deputies were shooting, he declared, when he fell after running 100 yards.

On Friday a witness was borne in on a hospital stretcher and replied to the questioning in tremulous and husky whispers. He was shot three times in the back; two of the balls struck him near the base of the spine, from the effects of which he has become an utterly helpless paralytic. He still suffers greatly. He was crying and moaning while the stretchers were being moved, and as he lay still the sweat was in beads on his forehead, and Judge Woodward ordered the tipstaves to open windows that fresh air might come to the witness, whose face was gray and pined, the once muscular hands of the pick-swinging miner wasted to bony talons.

Bernard Ruman is this victim's name. He has not moved his body or limbs since three bullets from the deputies' guns tore into him, grazed his spinal column and made him a paralytic for life. But of such vital importance did District Attorney Martin consider Ruman's testimony that he had brought him from Hazleton hospital at the risk of his life. The story told by Ruman was a simple one, so simple that even Lenahan did not have the heart to torture Ruman with a long cross-examination. So he asked a few questions, and then told him that was all.

The release, however, was meaningless to the sufferer, and he lay pinching his finger nails into the woodwork of the stretcher and biting his lips in agony, until they carried him from the warm court room into the cool court yard.

Ruman's words, spoken through an interpreter were: "I was in the crowd of strikers. When we reached Lattimer I saw Sheriff Martin advance and take hold of a man. After some words the sheriff shot him, and then as the man clung to the sheriff's clothes, the latter hit him on the head with his revolver and he fell to the ground. When the general firing began I started to run. I had just climbed over the railway track when a bullet struck me in the back, and I fell. As I lay on the ground I was shot twice through the legs. I have not been able to move since." This statement remained unchanged after the cross-examination.

E. C. Laubach, a baker of Freeport, said he was in Lattimer in September last. Had been through the town and was at the side of the fence near the first and second house at the time of the shooting. He was one of the few American witnesses and his testimony was important. He showed the jury on a map where he stood about fifteen or twenty yards behind the deputies. He said:

"The deputies were formed in line before the miners arrived. The miners were one-quarter of a mile away when the deputies formed. The miners came down the road quietly and had no weapons. They got within 100 yards of where I stood. Others were behind. They walked four or five abreast. A man marched in front carrying a flag. Sheriff Martin walked out towards the men. It looked to me as if they crowded around him. I saw no scuffle. The crowd did not stop, moved on. I did not see any weapons with them."

"What else did you see?" asked Martin.

"The first thing I heard was some one call fire. I don't know who it was. It sounded to the right of me somewhere."

"Did you know any of the deputies?"

"I know Bill Raught." The witness went down and pointed out Raught and continued:

"I heard William Raught say that he had five or seven shots fired. He was putting cartridges in his gun at that time. The man who was talking with him said he had emptied his gun. They were shooting cartridges into their guns at the side."

"Can you point out the other deputy?"

"I could not. I never seen him before or since."

"Did you see the deputies running down the alley shooting?"

"I saw two deputies running down the alley shooting. They shot in the ground and in the air. The firing had then almost ceased. The firing lasted about a half minute. It sounded like fire-crackers. There were first three regular shots."

"What did the miners do?"

"At the first they did not seem to know what to do, but soon they began running across the railroad."

On cross-examination the witness said he worked for his brother. He said he heard the Lattimer people say they expected the strikers. He admitted he did not want to meet the strikers. He wanted to be on the safe side. He said he did not see the sheriff after he went into the crowd until after the shooting.

The witness was carefully examined by Mr. Lenahan, and the jury seemed to take a deep interest in the testimony. Laubach said he did not see Raught crossed the road except to remove a wounded man from the trolley tracks.

The witness gave very impartial testimony, the most important part of which was to show how often some of the deputies fired.

Another riddled victim was Andrew Slabodnik who was shot three times. He was walking near the tail end of the procession of strikers at Lattimer, and swore that he was running away when brought down. He was shot twice clean through the body, and once in the right arm. He is another and unique miracle in the list of recoveries. Naked to the waist, he showed his scars.

TRAIN SERVICE REDUCED.

Lehigh Valley's New Schedule Gives Free Land Poor Accommodations.

The reduction made in the train service on the Lehigh Valley Railroad yesterday has resulted in giving Free Land poorer railroad and mail accommodations than it has had for many years past. The new schedule has abolished all Sunday trains on the Free Land branch, and communication with the outside world by rail is entirely cut off on the first day of the week.

The train which left here daily at 6:05 a. m., connecting at the Lumber Yard for New York and Philadelphia, has been discontinued. This train was used by persons who wished to reach the large cities early in the day, also by Free Land miners employed at Hazle Brook. It was also a main train and daily carried orders from our merchants to the wholesale houses in Philadelphia and New York. Its discontinuance has caused much talk in business circles.

The first mail out this morning left here at 7:35 o'clock, reaching the main line via White Haven. The morning mail had not arrived up to 11 o'clock.

Station Agent McHugh did not receive the new time table for Free Land in time to publish all the changes today, consequently it is not known how badly the new schedule will affect passenger and mail service on this branch. The train for Wilkesbarre at 10:51 has been taken off, and it is rumored that many others have been discontinued.

A meeting of the Board of Trade has been called for Wednesday evening, at which it is expected the business interests will be ably represented and a movement started which will give the town better railroad and mail service.

Output of Anthracite Last Year.

The production of anthracite coal in 1897 has been officially reported at 41,637,864 tons, as against 43,177,485 tons the preceding year and 46,511,477 tons in 1895, the year of the greatest production. In 1893 and again in 1892 the production was slightly larger than last year but the excess was not great. The percentages were very closely observed. The coal trusts year does not end until January 31 and any little irregularities in the table given below were corrected very closely in the month of January, but for the calendar year 1897 the companies kept surprisingly close to their allotments, as shown by the following percentage table:

Foreigner Meets a Singular Death.

From the Hazleton Standard.
Andrew Budue, a prominent foreigner of Beaver Brook, was found dead in a pool of water early yesterday morning, several hundred feet from the Beaver Brook houses. From what could be ascertained Budue was last seen alive at the residence of Stephen Analski, in Beaver Brook, about 10 o'clock on Saturday night, where he secured a lantern to guide his footsteps homeward. He had been imbibing freely as far as could be learned. He was found a short distance from the path with the lantern about fifty feet distant.

Cox building and four in the Daniel Cox building, were read from the following plumbers: William Birkbeck, $90.20; T. Malloy, $87; Joseph Birkbeck, $85; William Williamson, $68.75. It was agreed that Mr. Williamson should do the job, provided he is satisfied to wait for his money until the board is able to pay him.

To Cure Constipation Forever.

Take Cascarets Candy Cathartic, 10c or 25c. If C. C. C. fail to cure, druggists refund money.

Fatal Accident on the D. S. & S.

An accident on the D. S. & S. on Saturday morning resulted in the death of one man and serious injuries to two others. The passenger train, while running between Onedia and Shepton, collided with a mine locie of the Cross Creek Coal Company, shortly before noon. The locie, which runs on a third rail between those towns, has the right of way over this part of the D. S. & S tracks, and was running at a high rate of speed. Ten mine cars were in front of it and ten dump cars behind it. When the train struck, the mine cars piled over the locie, killing Michael Marretti, a helper, and breaking the leg of the fireman, Patrick Sharpe, who with his fireman Thomas Toshi, had jumped from the locie.

The passenger train, which was in charge of Engineer William McNelis, Conductor John J. Carr, Baggage Master W. J. Timony and Brakeman David Hanlon, all of Freeport, was not damaged to any extent, but the passengers did fare so well. The collision threw the trainmen about, bruising them more or less, and one passenger, Mrs. Joseph Marchette (nee Miss Mary Wallace), residing on Centre street near South, was seriously hurt. She was accompanied by three children, all of whom escaped by slight bruises. Mrs. Marchette was taken to Shepton for treatment.

Oh Saturday evening an inquest over the remains of the dead laborer was held by the Schuylkill county authorities. The D. S. & S. will also investigate the accident.

Agitate for the New County.

From the Hazleton Sentinel.
The agitation for the new county is now about due, and henceforth it should be regarded as the duty of every citizen of this district to neglect no opportunity to promote this badly needed legislation. It is the impression among well informed men that the measure will be in better shape to receive the endorsement of the legislature at the next session than ever before. The people of the entire state are now well acquainted with the situation here and with the great necessity for such a division.

It does not seem possible that there will be very great opposition to it this time, but that should be no reason for the citizens who have suffered so long to sit idly by and permit the matter to rest until the last moment. The agitation should be continued from now on. The selection of a man for the legislature should devolve entirely upon this subject, for there is nothing of such great importance to the people of lower Luzerne, and upper Luzerne too for that matter, than the erection of a new county here.

Inspector Davies' Report.

Mine Inspector Davies has just completed his report for 1897, and the same has been submitted to the Bureau of Mining. The papers show that 5,487,550 tons of coal were mined. The total shipments were 4,758,842 tons. The average number of days worked were 141.120. To mine this amount of coal it required 97,842 kegs of black powder and 931,572 pounds of dynamite. There were 33 fatal and 114 non-fatal accidents. The number of tons mined per fatal accident were 166,289; tons mined for non-fatal accident 48,146. There was a decrease of 9 fatal and an increase of 23 non-fatal accidents over 1896. The report shows 18 widows and 33 orphans. The total number of employees is 17,119, inside 8,806, outside 8,253. There are 1,854 mules and horses and 1,187 boilers used about the collieries.

Surprised Their Pastor.

The Jeddo and Drifton members of St. Paul's P. M. church paid a pleasant visit to Rev. S. Cooper and family on Saturday evening. They came loaded with good things, which were highly appreciated by the pastor and family, but the surprise of evening came when all sat down to partake of the delightful repast which had been prepared. Under the plate of Rev. Cooper was found a neat sum of money. It is needless to say that the reverend gentleman was very grateful to his guests for their unexpected kindness. He responded appropriately to the gifts, expressing his desire for a continuance of the good feeling which has been so often manifested in the past between the pastor and people of St. Paul's church.

Looking for Beall's Heirs.

Samuel B. Beall, bachelor, carpenter by trade, died intestate in Missouri, leaving no known heirs and an estate of $7,000. He claimed to be from Pennsylvania, was 5 feet 10 or 11 inches in height, spare frame, light blue eyes, about 76 years old; eccentric. Probably some of our readers might be interested in his estate. Inquiries will be answered by Warren D. Isenberg, attorney-at-law, Union Trust building, St. Louis.
