Sudden Death of a Young Man.

John Grula, one of the best known Slavish residents of Freeland, died suddenly at his home, corner of Ridge and Main streets, at half-past one o'clock on Friday morning. His death is attributed to heart disease. He was not sick for some time previous to the attack which carried him off, having worked the previous day and spent Thursday evening in his usual good health. About 11 o'clock he retired with no warning of his end being so near. At 1.30 o'clock he woke his wife and tried to tell her of his sufferings, but before she could summon assitance he turned over and died. Mr. Grula was a very intelligent man of his class, and when St. Mary's Coperative Association conducted its large store on Fern street he was manager of the same. He also worked as clerk in other grocery stores of town, and at the time of his death was employed in Drifton store. He was aged 35 years and is survived by a wife and three children.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon. Services were held over the remains at St. John's Slavish church by Rev. John E. Stas, after which the body was interred in St. Ann's cemetery.

The funeral was attended by the societies connected with St. John's church and by many others. Among the beautiful floral offerings was a pillow from Drifton store clerks and a cross from the societies.

Amateur Actors Win Applause.

The rendition of "Imogene, or the Witch's Secret." at the Grand on Saturday evening, by a company playing under the auspices of St. Patrick's band, was a dramatic and financial success, and the results went far beyond the expectations of the promoters. The various persons taking part acquitted themselves with credit throughout, especially the ladies, Misses B. Curran, Katie Gillespie and Annie Dever. They played their roles with ability and gave proof of the talents they possess, Patrick Dever, Thos. J. Quigley, Leo McDonaid, William Quigley and Frank McKinley did justice to their parts, and Michael Boyle and Thomas Welsh filled the minor roles with satisfaction.

During the play vocal selections were ably rendered by Miss Curran and Thos. Quigley, Frank McKinley and James Reed. Owing to the performance taking place on Saturday evening many people were unable to attend and requests have been made of the company to reproduce the piece. It has not yet been decided whether this will be done.

LIFE'S PASSING SHOW.

LEADING FIGURES OF THE CENTRE STREET PROMENADE.

Varied Stages of the Miner's Life-The Hopes, Fears, Doubts and Despair.

Centre street, every pleasant afternoon, takes on the appearance of a promenade avenue in a large city. The number of people who pass their time on this thoroughfare gives the town an active and business-like air, an aspect, however, which is not warranted by the facts. The promenaders are the idle men of town and the surrounding villages, who find Centre street the most pleasant place to spend their enforced leisure. These toilers are not idling of their own free will, and every man of them would prefer to be at work, but such is life in this particular section of the world that they must cease their labors when commanded, regardless of any desire they may have to earn more. The orders of the great trust, to restrict the output of coal, must be carried out, and it matters not to the coal barons whether the miner's larder be full or empty.

The Centre street promenade gives they were disappointed.

Now, at the age when he should by preparing to retire from active labors and spend his declining years in ease the old miner finds that to save himsel and aged wife from becoming a public charge he must eke out an existence on the breaker. His disappoinment in life is not visible to the casual observer of the passing show, as the old man moves along with a harmless joke or a witty answer thrown to his friends, but the carrowen lips so his freetful that save careworn lines on his face tell their own story.

Next come the middle-aged workers, the great mass in which is contained the actual miners of this vicinity, those who have come to that stage in life when their future course should have been fully outlined and the sphere in life which they should fill ought to be known. They speak encouragingly of the days to come, they have theories of how to right the wrongs of their class and make the coal fields blossom as in days of yore, and the topics of the day are discussed with their comrades with a degree of intelligence that few would expect from coal miners.

But what unexpressed uncertainties intelligence that few would expect from coal miners.

But what unexpressed uncertainties and doubts fill their breasts? Will their predictions, and plans for higher ideals, come true, or will they in turn fall victims to present conditions and take the places of their tottering fathers, become crippled or physical wrecks and meet old age with poverty staring them in the face? Their inability to truthfully pierce the gloom of the future causes many a spectre of want and misery to loom up as a probability, if not already a fact, notwithstanding that outwardly they profess to regard the existing state of affairs merely as a temporary inconvenience. From his loved ones he hides his secret fears as best he can, but nature, true to itself, places the imprint of his perplexity in a position which resisting that the contract the termore where the contract has been as a second of the contract that the contract has been as a contract to the contract that the contract the contract that the contract the contract that ture, true to itself, places the imprint of his perplexity in a position which re-quires him to wear a mask of cheerful ness. Individuals of this class may be found grave or gay, according as the promise of the future appears dark of bright.

Then the young men, the bright spots of the community, pass in review. Their amusements and pleasures for the present cost them more thought than future troubles. Buoyed up by the knowledge that they possess strong arms and good constitutions and that the country is broad and long, they give but minimum heed to what may come tomorrow. They, with all the others mentioned, would rather labor than be idle, but unless a widowed mother or some such dependent has thrown the cares of life upon his shoulders before his years the young man of the mines believes himself independent and able to escape becoming enslaved to the operators.

Among the Centre street promenaders must not be overlooked another great sub-division—the sturdy sons of lower and central Europe. What disappoint-
