The Use of the Great Toe.
The negroes of the West Indies use the great toe constantly in climbing. Several years ago, while spending some time at one of the famous resorts in Jamaica, I had an opportunity to observe the skill with which the black women, who do a great part of the menial labor, carried stone, mortar and other building materials on their heads to the top of the five-story tower in a part of the hotel not then finished.

Much of the unerring accuracy with which they (women and girls) chased each other up and down the long ladders, with heavy loads skillfully poised on their woolly heads, was due to the firmness with which they grasped each rung of the ladders with the great toe. They did not place the ball or the hollow of the foot on the rung, but the groove at the juncture of the great toe with the body of the foot, and they held fast by making the back of the other toes afford the other gripping surface. In much the same way the Abyssinian native cavalry grasp the stirrup. And I have seen one armed Santo Domingan black, astride the rear ox in a wheel yoke, guiding a lead mule with a rein held between his great and second toes, while his only arm was devoted to cracking his teamster's whip.—Overland Monthly.

STRONG STATEMENTS.

Three Women Relieved of Female Troubles by Mrs. Pinkham.

From Mrs. A. W. SMITH, 50 Summer St., Biddeford, Me.:

"For several years I suffered with various diseases peculiar to my sex. Was troubled with a burning sensation across the small of my back, that all-gone feeling, was despondent, fretful and discouraged; the least exertion tired me. I tried several doctors but received little benefit. At last I decided to give you Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. The effect of the first bottle was magical. Those symptoms of weakness that I was afflicted with, vanished like vapor before the sun. I cannot speak too highly of your valuable remedy. It is truly a boon to women."

From Mrs. MELISSA PHILLIPS, Lexington, Ind., to Mrs. Pinkham:
"Before I began taking your medicine I had suffered for two years with that tired feeling, headache, backache, no appetite, and a run-down condition of the system. I could not walk across the room. I have taken four bottles of the Vegetable Compound, one box of Liver Pills and used one package of Sanative Wash, and now feel like a new woman, and am able to do my work."

From Mrs. MOLLIE E. HERREL, Powell Station, Tenn.:

"For three years I suffered with such weakness of the back, I could not perform my household duties. I also had falling of the womb, terrible bearing-down pains and headache. I have taken two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and feel like a new woman. I recommend your medicine to every woman I know."

FIELDS OF ADVENTURE.

THRILLING INCIDENTS AND DARING DEEDS ON LAND AND SEA.

An African Hunter's Narrow Escape From Death in an Encounter With an Elephant—A Hot Fight With a Gray Eagle—Father Braves Death For Son.

H. S. H. Cavendish, in a paper that appears in the new volume of the Geographical Journal, describes a narrow escape he had from death in an encounter with an elephant near Lake Stefanie, in Somaliland. The animal had already been wounded in two places, when, says Mr. Cavendish, "We saw that he was very angry, swaying his trunk above his head, and throwing up sand every now and then. I saw that he was certain to charge if I did not kill him with the first shot, and thought that we had better leave him alone; but I followed up to the bush, and took as good a shot as I could get below his ear at a distance of about forty yards. The bullet seemed to have no effect, for the elephant just turned round facing us, and walked straight for the bush by which we were concealed. He then stopped a second, with his trunk waving the wind along the ground, and we were, unfortunately, my left barrel had only an empty cartridge-case in it, which had jammed, and which I was unable to remove.

"My gun-bearer then said we had better make a run for it, and at that moment the elephant charged. The only way back to the bushes was over a plain about 100 yards wide, so giving my gun to the bearer, we started off in different directions; but the elephant had caught sight of us, and made for me as straight as a dart. I was unable to run very fast on account of the terribly rough ground, which had been broken up by the elephants, the holes being concealed by the grass. I tried to dodge him, but he was too quick for me, and as I neared the thin mimosa bush I saw him just over me with his trunk in the air, so I threw myself to the left on my face and kept still, thinking that the elephant might go on; he, however, stopped immediately, and spinning round, knelt down behind me, with his head right over me, and took a drive at me with his tusks, which I luckily avoided by rolling in closer under his chest. He then pushed me under him with his trunk, and tried to pound me with his knees, but, as luck would have it, I was just out of his reach; I kept dodging his legs as they came down. At one moment he lay on me, and I expected every moment to hear the bones crack; but suddenly his weight was lifted off me, and I pretended I was dead, and, not wishing to see the coup de grace coming, closed my eyes and remained quite still.

"The boys told me afterward that he got up and backed off my body, and knocked his leg against a log of wood lying close behind. Mistaking it for me, he vented his rage on it; he must have been badly wounded. After a time he moved away, and on my return to camp I went to bed, and sent out twenty boys to finish off the wounded elephant. This they succeeded in doing after putting thirty bullets into him; he charged in every direction and died hard."

Fight With an Eagle.
A very handsome specimen of the gray eagle family, which he has in the possession of R. L. E. Simmons and Dr. Holcomb, of Albina, Oregon, since Sunday, has attracted much attention, and has also aroused the curiosity of his friends, as they declined to state how they became possessed of the bird, and both declared that they were at church on Sunday, and so could not have had anything to do with the killing of it.

A gentleman who resides out on Columbia slough came to town, and told a story which has let the cat out of the bag. He said that on Sunday two men, whom he knew to be residents of Albina, but whose names he did not know, were out hunting along the slough, and had a desperate encounter with a big gray eagle, which he witnessed with much interest until a charge of shot came pattering around him. When he first observed the hunters they were making a sneak under cover of a fence, trying to get a shot at some geese. Just as they were within shooting distance a large gray eagle swooped down and fastened his talons in one of the geese.

Without offering to shoot at the other geese as they flew away, the two hunters and their dog rushed forward to attack the eagle, which was endeavoring to carry off the goose, but was not able to rise into the air with it on account of its weight. The dog reached the eagle first, and, not having had any experience with this sort of "game," boldly attacked it. The eagle at once abandoned the goose and turned its attention to the dog, fixing its talons in the sides of his head and beating him furiously with its strong wings. The hunters arriving at this juncture, the eagle released the dog, which ran off yelping, and faced its more dangerous antagonists.

In their excitement they discharged their guns without taking aim, and one of them came near shooting the interested spectator. They then clubbed their guns, and did their best to beat off the eagle, who was desperately endeavoring to fasten his talons in one or both of them, with the amiable intention of plucking their eyes out. There was a hot time on the slough for a while. The eagle, having apparently lost all fear, flounced around and seemed to have more beaks and talons than any doubled-headed, double-breasted Prussian eagle ever seen. The hunters made lively play with their guns, but the eagle's solar plexus could not be reached. The hunters called and called for their dog, but he had had enough, and continued to calmly watch the fight from a distance.

Finally a lucky blow stunned the gallant bird, his wings drooped and he came to the ground, and the hunters sprang on him and put an end to him.—For and Oregonian.

Father's Heroic Act.

An exhibition of heroism was given at the Spring street railroad station, Elizabeth, N. J., recently by Frederick Dusterdieck, who in order to save the life of his son probably sacrificed his own. There were a number of people on the station platform at the time, and the heroism of the father made a deep impression on them.

Dusterdieck is a young man and lives on Meadow street. He started for a visit to friends in Brooklyn, taking his child with him. They reached the station some time before the train was due and the child was permitted to walk about the platform near his father.

Just as the train slowed into the station and before the father realized the boy's intention, the lad started to run across the tracks. Dusterdieck dashed after the boy and caught him just as the child was in front of the locomotive, the pilot being only a dozen feet away.

The father seized the boy with a powerful grip, and realizing that it was too late to save both the child and himself, turned slightly and threw the boy off the track. The instant the child left his hands, Dusterdieck was struck by the locomotive and knocked down. He did not rise and several men on the platform ran to his assistance.

They found that the father was unconscious, and that he had been badly injured on the head. Blood was oozing from a wound in the scalp, and it seemed as though he was dead. A hurry call was sent for the General Hospital ambulance, and the injured man was taken to that institution. An examination indicated that Dusterdieck's skull had been fractured. He remained unconscious until morning, when he partly revived.

Extraordinary Ghost Story.
In the whole record of so-called "supernatural appearances" there is not one which is more thoroughly authenticated than the following:

John Cope Sherbrooke and George Waynard were two officers in the Thirty-third regiment, and at the time of the extraordinary occurrence here related the regiment was on service in Canada. One evening, as usual, they went into a little room adjoining Waynard's bedroom and commenced reading.

After a few minutes Captain Sherbrooke looked up from his book and saw standing in a doorway of the room a man who was a perfect stranger to him. At a loss to account for the intrusion, Captain Sherbrooke turned to his companion to ask if the stranger was an acquaintance of his. Waynard was as pale as death, and apparently incapable of speech. Seeing this, Captain Sherbrooke made no effort to stop the figure, which slowly crossed the apartment and passed through a door leading to Waynard's bedroom. As soon as the man was out of sight Waynard recovered his faculties and cried out, "My brother!" "Your brother?" repeated Sherbrooke. "What can you mean, Waynard? There must be some deception. Follow me."

They then went into the bedroom, a room from which the only possible means of exit was the one door already referred to. They found the room empty.

This incident produced a profound impression among the officers of the regiment who knew that both Sherbrooke and Waynard were sober, cool-headed men of unblemished integrity. Waynard declared that the apparition was the spirit of his brother, and expressed the conviction that his brother was dead.

When time had elapsed sufficient to allow inquiries to be made it was discovered that he had died on the very night on which his spirit had appeared to the astonished officers in Canada. Of the two witnesses of this strange episode one became General Sir John Cope Sherbrooke, G. C. B., and the other Lieutenant-Colonel Waynard, of the Twenty-fourth Light Dragoons.—New York World.

Speeding For Life Over a Burning Bridge.

Engineer William Narragong had a thrilling experience a few nights ago. He runs No. 9 passenger train, due at Tamaqua, Penn., from Philadelphia at 9:38. As his train rounded Sprigler's Curve, several miles south of this city, he was horrified to see that the old covered wooden bridge was enveloped in flames. To stop was impossible, as the distance was too short, so he threw the throttle wide open and dashed on the burning bridge, reaching the other side with his human cargo in safety. The heat was very strong, and in the short space of time required to cover the 100 feet composing the bridge the cars were blistered and the roofs covered with burning debris. Had the train been ten minutes later it would have landed in the Schuylkill and caused a great loss of life, as the bridge burned very rapidly.

Fire-Worshippers and Kerosene.

A knowledge of the existence of petroleum at Baku, Russia, is so ancient that we find the ruins of a temple to Zoroaster. The worship of fire—so easy to obtain that it was only necessary to prod the soil with a stick and set fire to the vapor that issued out of it—was continued until so recent a time as twenty years ago, when several Parsee priests were in Baku for the purpose of worshipping that which we of this iconoclastic time buy in the corner groceries to fill our lamps.—Harper's Magazine.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN.

Rage For Ribbons.
There is a rage in Paris for ribbons. Wide or medium ribbon is tied around the neck in the morning, with the chemise and jacket. Bows of ribbon and a long, narrow sash for evening dress are accompanied by the "windmill" bow, swaggering on the shoulder or at the bosom, conquering by its audacity and triumphing by its lustre.—New York World.

War in Fashions.
The war fever is beginning to creep into the world of fashion. Some new hat pins have for the head a shell with a scarlet fuse, a small mortar, a cutlass, or a boarding pike. For pins the same are employed as are also crossed rifles, a little cannon, a canteen or a musket and a bayonet. Cuff buttons are decorated in similar style, and the stamped metal ornaments which are made for pocketbook, work boxes and the like, bear the same evidences of the condition of the times. In many of the new styles of waists and jackets there are shoulder straps and epaulettes and the military frog is beginning to appear in place of the more pacific button and buttonhole.—New York Mail and Express.

The Coming Notice.
Round-waisted bodices are promised for hot-weather dresses. These are finished with epaulettes and sashes. With the small sleeve has come a perfect mania for bretelles to give to the shoulders the breadth formerly afforded by the big sleeve. We have slashed, gathered and plaited bretelles. One style is intended to give a pretty sloping effect; another the broad look from shoulder to shoulder. The sleeve beneath the cap is only a close coat shape devoid of wrinkle or puff. Shoulder arrangements of some kind seen equally becoming to both slim and stout figures. A silk reception gown is noted with a half dozen tiny frills forming the sleeve cap, while another has three successive caps each slashed in the middle and faced with plain silk.

Lavender Perfume in Fashion.
Old-fashioned lavender perfume has come back to favor among the many other revivals of nearly a century ago. It appears in the list of French extracts and sachets, and its delicate fragrance exhales from the petals of choice Parisian-made artificial flowers. The odor of lavender is agreeable to many people who do not like other perfumes. In imagination it is always associated with freshness, sweetness, and housewifely daintiness. Poets have sung the praises of lavender, and in general estimation the odorless gray-blue-tinted spike ranks next only to the regal rose and the modest violet. (Lavender produces a sense of refreshment, and the modest color of the flower seems in perfect union with its scent. The lavender plant was formerly considered an emblem of affection, and, sweet and fresh as it always is, has become from association the synonym of anything carefully laid by for future use.—New York Post.

Study of Household Economies.

The effort to have women undertake the study of household economies in their clubs is still sufficiently difficult to indicate the strong hold more abstract subjects have upon the average club woman. Hours of time are spent over the most encyclopedic and academic work to produce papers on far-away and irrelevant subjects, while the vital and prevalent things of everyday life are indifferently turned away from. If the matter is brought before a literary club, it is declined as being too prosaic and not in the lines of culture and general knowledge. This is a serious mistake. A study of household economies can be made as literary and historical as a study of the Cid or of the Wars of the Roses. If the energy expended in pursuing these latter undoubtedly interesting but unnecessary schemes of study could be expended in an intelligent and persistent effort to understand a few of the principles included in household economies, the club movement among women would be productive of more tangible results. When these organizations turn to practical work, it is then they achieve really important ends.

How to Treat Soiled Dresses.

Women's street dresses should receive proper attention. On muddy days health and neatness demand that they should be taken off when the wearer reaches her home, brushed and hung away to air, as it is not economy to wear a street dress in the house. A gown worn exclusively for the street, if it is carefully shaken, brushed and cleaned when necessary, will outlast two or three gowns that are carelessly treated. Dresses that are not thoroughly aired after being worn soon acquire a close, unpleasant odor.

A dusty dress requires an entirely different mode of treatment from a muddy one. After coming in from a dust storm it should be removed with the other wraps and bonnet, and all should be shaken thoroughly in the air, and then brushed off carefully with a stiff clothes brush which will reach into the seams. The velvet, if there is any, should be cleaned with a velvet brush or a clean piece of flannel.

A linen cloth so firm that it will not shed lint, wrung out in a mixture of alcohol and cold water and passed quickly over the surface will remove the light dust and give a lovely finish to the garment. If it is hung in a warm room for several hours afterward, it will look almost as good as new.—New York Tribune.

A little colored girl only thirteen years of age, Isabella Horton by name, is doing evangelistic work at Pittsburg. She preaches in a semi-scholastic, semi-clerical dress. From the proceeds of her work she intends to educate herself for further and more advanced labor.

Fashion Notes.

The ultra fashionable coat has a semi-tight-fitting front with almost tight back, and no fullness in the basque.

Popular materials for walking dresses in England are the new black alpaca with the fine white hair strip in them.

A dainty and beautiful effect in summer costumes is produced by combining white lawn with many insertions of black lace.

Velvet boleros, shaped to cover the whole upper portion of corsage, but variously shaped below, are to be a feature of early spring gowns.

A neat walking gown of turquoise gray face cloth, with diagonal trimming of black cadet braid. The waist has a slight blouse effect, with white moire revers, and a collar and tie of lace.

The pretty and picturesque neck and shoulder effects, and the new way of adjusting the fronts, render the very fashionable princess dress one of the most attractive models of the season.

Edgings and flonings made in all styles of lace are shown. Among the most popular are Brussels, Chantilly, Valenciennes, Venetian, Genoa, Flanders, point, duchesse and point de Paris.

For women with high foreheads the correct way to dress the hair is to have a few curls over the temples. This softens the face considerably and is exceedingly becoming when the hat comes far over on the eyes.

Dog collars of pearls, and coral beads of the old-fashioned irregular shape fastened with jeweled buckles, are still worn with dressy afternoon gowns, as well as with the square décollete theatre waists, and they are sometimes made of flagree silver and jet.

A Remarkable Case.
The following case was printed originally in The Monitor, a newspaper published at Meaford, Ontario. Doubts were raised as to its truthfulness, consequently a close watch was kept on the case for two years and the original statement has now been completely verified.

Mr. Petch had been a hopeless paralytic for five years. His case has had wide attention. He was confined to his bed, was blinded almost beyond recognition, and could not take solid food. Doctors called the disease spinal sclerosis, and all said he could not live. The Canadian Mutual Life Association after a thorough examination, paid him his total disability claim of $1,600, regarding him as forever incurable.

For three years he lingered in this condition. After taking some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People there was a slight change, a tendency to sweat freely. Next came a little feeling in the limbs. This extended, followed by a pricking sensation, until at last the blood began to course freely and vigorously through his body. Soon he was restored to his old-time health.

A reporter for The Monitor recently called on Mr. Petch again and said: "You may say there is no doubt as to my cure being permanent. I am in better health than when I gave you the first invoice and certainly attribute my cure to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

"To these pills I owe my release from the living death, and I shall always bless the day I was induced to take them."

These pills are sold by all druggists and are considered by them to be one of the most valuable remedial agents known to science.

Dramatist Gilbert's Joke.
The following smart example of repartee is attributed to W. S. Gilbert. The dramatist was at an evening party, and chanced to be standing bare-headed in the hall, when a guest, departing in a hurry, mistook him for a waiter.

"Call me a four-wheeler, will you," said he.

"Sir," replied the ready author of "The Mikado" and a round dozen other operas, "you are a four-wheeler."

The guest was startled by this reply. "Why," he exclaimed, "what the—"

But Mr. Gilbert interrupted him with an elaborate pretense of apology. "I couldn't call you hansom, you know, could I?"

Rights of Newsboys.

The judgment comes from the District court at the national capital that the sale of newspapers on the streets is a legitimate business, and that newsboys have a right to enter street cars and sell newspapers to passengers provided they behave themselves and leave the car when their business is finished. One newsboy was forcibly ejected from a car in Washington some time ago and had a leg crushed by a car running on the other track. He has just obtained an award of $5,000 damages from a jury under instructions to the above effect by the judge.

"Well," said the import, "you want a position as tea-taster, do you? Have you ever had any experience in this business?" "No," the applicant replied, "but I've boarded around and eaten at restaurants so long that I know I'd be a good one at it. I could tell the genuine tea right off, because it would be so different, you know."—Chicago News.

It requires as much time to get away from a persistent agent as it does to say good-by to an affectionate woman.
