The election of a solicitor was then taken up. Before receiving nominations Director Sweeney vigorously opposed the election, C. O. Stroh and J. M. Carr were placed in—nomination. The former received the votes of Messrs. Trevaskis, Everitt, Vanhorn, Kline, Schaub, Ferry and Krommes, and the latter the votes of Messrs. Trevaskis, Everitt, Vanhorn, Kline, Schaub, Ferry and Krommes, and the latter the votes of Messrs. Sweeney and Johnson. The salary was fixed at $40 per year.

Breaking the Hoisting Record.

Efforts are being made at No 5 colliery. Jeddo, every working day to break the hoisting record made on the 16th inst. On that day 662 cars were sent to and through the breaker. The cars used in this colliery are the largest in the anthracite region and the slope is one of the deepest. The record of 662 is, therefore, is something hard-to surpass, but the officers expect to do it—and they will, if the flesh and blood of the employes does not rebel or collapse in the mad rush and whirl. Record-breaking is a neat way of getting men to do two days work in ten hours.

The Facts Did Not Please.
The report of the assault upon a Drifton Austrian on the 18th inst., as published in the Timiuris on Monday last, did not please our contemporary, the Press. It appears that the paragraph relating to the removal of the arc light on East Front street unflied somebody's feathers. Our article, however, was published strictly according to the facts. The light which was removed formerly hung almost directly over the spot where the man was assaulted, and the darkness prevented the residents of the vicinity from seeing the faces of the men or learning the number engaged in the faces. A Thinker propresentative was on the scene a few moments after the assault took place, and every word published can be corroborated by more than a dozen witnesses.

Dynamite Fiends at Work.

An unsuccessful attempt was made early Thursday morning near Pittston to kill Michael Stravinski and his family; consisting of his wife and three children. The would-be assassins used dynamite to blow up the family's residence, and so terrible was the force of the house remains. It was about 3 o'clock when the dwellings for almost a mile around the wrecked house were shaken as though by an earthquake. The awakened residents knew not where to run, until their attention was attracted by the cries from the Stravinski house where the cause of the commotion was terribly in evidence.

COMPETE WITH THE REGULAR

If equipped, would be ready to move on the enemy and would give just as good an account in action as the most of the regulars.

Never before have men been known to improve so fast in the school of the soldier as the troops now encamped on this historical field. I believe the spirits of the brave fellows who fell here on September 19-20, 1863, have been coaching us. The regular army officers detailed here are as much surprised as our own officers in the great improvement of the men in soldiery bearing.

The influence of the Pennsylvania troops in this camp is being felt by all other commands. None here elicit more praise than the First Pennsylvania troops in this camp is being felt by all other commands. Mone here elicit more praise than the First Pennsylvania volunteers, and General Grant has stated to the staff of General Poland, our brigade commander, that nearly the whole regiment was fit to be made line officers and he would make no mistakes to appoint any of the men to commands in the army.

The First Pennsylvania Volunteers was the First regiment, N. G. P., before being mustered into this big army, and as we were only allowed 63 in a company in the state service, and now are recruited to 106, you can see that only a little more than half our number are National Guardsmen. But the new recruits are showing up nobly and it is hard now to detect the difference—so perfect have all become in military work. The rank and file of the First has all trades and professions representation in the arms and file of the First has all trades and professions representation in the arm of the more recommendation of the boys come from Philadelphia's first families a high spirit prevails in the regiment. In the Guard we were known as the "Dandy First," and this title still follows us.
