Modern Longevity.

In the seventeenth century the average duration of life was only thirteen years; in the eighteenth, twenty; in the present century it is thirty-six. This great increase in the average length of human life is not, however, an indication of an increase in the vigor and vitality of the race, but it is rather due to the fact that cholera, the black plague and other devastating scourges which formerly overspread whole countries at frequent intervals, sometimes several times during a century, have been brought more and more under control by improved public sanitation and quarantine. The real test of the vitality of the race is not the average length of human life, but the proportion of centenarians. The proportion of persons who have attained great age is without doubt at the present time much less than ever before in the history of the world. before in the history of the world.

"My health has been better ever since, can now walk quite a distance and am troubled no more with palpitation of the heart or bloating. I recommend your medicine to all sufferers from female troubles."

It is hardly reasonable to suppose that any one can doubt the efficiency of Mrs. Pinkham's methods and medicine in the face of the tremendous volume of testimony.

She craved a spray of blossoms
That grew high upon a tree;
He said that he would get them,
And she clapped her hands in glee.

He slowly clambered up to where The fragrant blossoms grew, When suddenly the farner's dog Came bounding into view.

She screamed and ran with all her might,
The dog was close behind;
He bit her heel and tore her skirt
And spoiled her peace of mind. And spoiled her peace.

And he that sat up in the tree—
Ah, what of him? you say.

She blamed him for it all, of course,
And they are foes to-day.
