Tony Farrell in "The Hearthstone."
A pastoral Irish play entitled "The Hearthstone" will be presented by Tony Farrell and a choice company of comedians at the Grand opera house next Thesday evening. The fact that Mr. Herne is the author of the play is a guarantee of its excellence. He is a writer of whom has been said: "All he writes is real; he never stoops to trickery; he touches the heart through his naturalness." No man of the present decade is more thoroughly a master of the art of play-writing. He is a firm believer that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin." In addition to his ability as a playwright, Mr. Herne has been the greatest factor of the present age in bringing about an affiliation between church and stage. The ability of Mr. Farrell and his company is already known, their previous appearances here having given satisfaction.

Suicide of a Farmer.

Daniel Uplinger, a Butler valley farmer, committed suicide Monday night by blowing out his brains. The unfortunate man had acted strangely for some time past, and his wife and children led an uneviable life since the change in his disposition became apparent. Uplinger on several occasions quarreled with the family, owing to his uncontrollable temper and drunken habits, and on Monday evening drove his wife and children from their home. Next morning his dead body was found in the house, with a bullet-hole in the head and a revolver lying close by.

The deceased was for several years a prosperous farmer, but of late he gave signs of becoming reckless and careless. He was well-known throughout the valley and in this vicinity, and is related to several Freeland people. He was about 50 years of age and left a wife and five children. A coroner's jury has been empaneled to officially pronounce him a suicide.

Strauss and F. W. Wheaton have resigned as censors of the Luzerne county ban.
They are attorneys for the Wilkesbarre and Wyoming Traction Company and it is understood they resigned in order to commence action against several lawyers for barraty. And it came to pass that after he had advertised his goods there came unto him great multitudes from the region roundabout, and did buy of him. And when his competitors saw it they marveled among themselves, saying, "How be it that this man is busy, while we loaf about our door." And he spoke unto them saying, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, in this fast age of push and rustle, it is easier for a camel to enter the eye of a needle than for a business man to flourish without advertising."

Exeter Mine Disaster.

The cause of the accident at the Exeter mine a few weeks ago, whereby nine men were killed and one badly injured, reached the courts on Tuesday for investigation, when David Price, the engineer, and Clinton Anthony, the brakeman, appeared in custody of the sheriff to answer the charge of having violated the mine law by making a flying switch, contrary to orders, and thereby, it is alleged, causing the accident.

On the morning of the day of the accident ten men on a cage were descending the Exeter shaft and had almost reached the bottom when three loaded mine cars falling from the surface crushed nine of them to death and permanently crippled the tenth. Price was the ed nine of them to death and perma-mently crippled the tenth. Price was the engineer and Anthony the brakeman of a small locomotive hauling cars between the Red Ash mine and the Exeter breaker. They coupled up to a trip of six cars at Red Ash mine and hauled it to the Exeter breaker, making a flying switch, as usual. The cars, instead of taking the track, which made a detour around the shaft, took the track straight for the shaft, because the switch was brought into court.

They appeared very much frightened, and when called before the bar young Anthony could not talk. Mine Inspector Hugh McDonald appeared as prosecutor. Mr. Strauss, for the defendants, moved to quash the indictment on the ground that there was nothing in the mine law to probibit "rilying switches." Extensive argument followed, the prosecution claiming that the defendants were guilty as charged, because they had failed to claiming that the defendants were guitty as charged, because they had failed to close the switch or to see that it was closed before making the "ify." Judges Lynch and Halsey consulted and finally decided to hold the defendants for court in the sum of $500 each.

Baseless Railroad Rumor.

Baseless Railroad Rumor.

There is a rumor going the rounds that on January 1, 1899, the Lehigh Valley will assume control of the Delaware and Hudson, between Wilkesbarre and Scranton, because by the new arrangements made with the Erie the line of track mentioned has been rendered valueless to the Delaware and Hudson.

Son.

There is no truth in the rumor so far as can be learned in Scranton. The Delaware and Hudson has valuable collieries at Plymouth, two more in Wilkesbarre and one in Mill Creek. In addition, its freight traffic is remunerative, while its passenger traffic is everything that could be desired. The stretch of track is in the finest condition and is easily kept in repair. It is also very cheaply operated, and all things considered, is a possession which the Delaware and Hudson is not likely to part with.

So far as the Valley's going into Scranton is concerned there is scarcely any necessity for that, and if any exists a short strotch of track from Avoca will accomplish the result. The Valley has direct connection with the Delaware and Hudson at Avoca. Besides, all the passenger and freight traffic which the Valley would obtain by running into Scranton it gets as cheaply at present from the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and Hudson, at this point.

Secret Marriage; Revealed.

The action brought some time ago to compel Miss Eliza A. Packer to give up certain effects of the late Daniel G. Driesbach of Scranton, has been discontinued. Some time ago Mr. Driesbach died at an advanced age, having several grown children. After he was buried Miss Eliza A. Packer, who had been his housekeeper for a long period, made the claim that she was his widow and refused to give up his effects. Suit was brought to compel her to do so. She has produced proofs of her marriage to Driesbach and the suit has subsequently been withdrawn.

Some years ago Driesbach was one of the best-known business men in that part of the state and was a director of Ninh Year-Rebell'on Put Down by His Strong Arm.

Write the careers of all the great statesmen living te-day and probably mone will be so thrilling as that of Li Hung Chang. The world may credit other men with richer deeds and hold their names in high re esteem, but those are not the points of comparison. The great achievements of most men of history were under conditions that did not exist in China during the many years that Li Hung Chang has been putting his name or the scroll of fame. Statesmen of other countries have had the people behind them. If not the people then the blstering power of government. Li Hung Chang has had the civil service, and the blood of a noble ancestry did not flow in his veins. Any Chinese may become a no-bleman of the highest rank through a series of graduations. Regular civil service examinations permit him to advance step by step. Even a Coolie may become a prime minister, and though highly improbable, it is not impossible, that a prime minister, with the powers and a cruel fate against him, might become a Coolie.

Li Hung Chang fought his way up in the face of the bitterest opposition, and as he forced his way up he forced China up with him, compelling her to adopt improvements that have given the country her present standing among progressive nations.

Romantic literature doesn't furnish a stronger story than that which covers the rise of Li Hung Chang from obscurity to fame. He was born February 11, 1822, and his biographers have falled to find any great names in his pedigree.

When twenty-five years old he was locally known for his erudition, and was appointed to a small office. It was in 1861, when 39 years old, that he demonstrated what kind of metal was in him. He had reached the position of taotai, or prefect, of the district of Kiangsu, which was then a hotbed of revolt. His success in putting down the rebellion there was so remarkable that a year later he was appointed acting general of the forces about Shanghai and Sung Kiang. There is where his masterful knowledge of European afairs showed itself. He was the one man in China who recognized the inferiority of the Chinese arms and the incompetency of its military code.

He engaged European generals and made the army learn the tactics of modern warfare. It was during that period that "Chinese" Gordon, afterwards killed in Kbartoum by El Madhi's troops while defending the British garrison there, was engaged. So also were the French generals, Bungoveine and Giguei. This was what is known as the Tai-Ping rebellion, perhaps the largest and bloodiest of Chinese history. More than half the entire country had risen, the purpose being to restore the Ming dynasty, which the Tartars had turned out.

It is on record that 27,000,000 persons were killed during this rebellion. But it was put down finally by the directing arm of Li Hung
