

After the Grip

Thousands of people say Hood's Sarsaparilla quickly restores the appetite, regulates the heart, vitalizes the blood, cures those sharp pains, dizziness, heavy head, that tired feeling. Hood's Sarsaparilla has marvelous power to expel all poisonous disease germs from the blood, and overcome the extreme weakness which is one of the peculiar effects of the grip.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
America's Greatest Medicine for the grip.
Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills. 25 cents.

$100 Reward, $100.
The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one cured disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hood's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hood's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing her work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address:

They're Only Artisans.
During the recent strike of ladies' tailors the proprietor of a well-known downtown establishment was endeavoring to explain to an interested customer the difference between the kind of work which is done in an establishment like his and that done by the shambling wretches who were fighting for "recognition" and their right to better pay. "You see," he explained, "men who never see a fine garment on a lady and who have no opportunity to observe and learn what good style is cannot be expected to turn out artistic work. They can never hope to become artists; they are simply artisans."

COULD NOT SLEEP.
Mrs. Pinkham Relieved Her of All Her Troubles.

Mrs. MADGE BARCOCK, 176 Second St., Grand Rapids, Mich., had ovarian trouble with its attendant aches and pains, now she is well. Here are her own words:
"My Vegetable Compound has made me feel like a new person. Before I began taking it I was all run down, felt tired and sleepy most of the time, had pains in my back and side, and such terrible headaches all the time, and could not sleep well nights. I also had ovarian trouble. Through the advice of a friend I began the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and since taking it all troubles have gone. My monthly sickness used to be so painful, but have not had the slightest pain since taking your medicine. I cannot praise your Vegetable Compound too much. My husband and friends see such a change in me. I look so much better and have some color in my face."

Mrs. Pinkham invites women who are ill to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice, which is freely offered.

TALES OF PLUCK AND ADVENTURE.

Daring Feat of a Steeple Jack.
Newark, N. J., has a Steeple Jack whose daring hereafter will never be questioned. He is Louis Loerk, a young man whose early fondness for climbing high buildings led him to adopt steeple climbing as an occupation.

A short time ago he was erecting and painting the tower of Seton Hall College, South Orange, and gilding the cross which surmounts the tower. He had intended to give the cross its first coat of paint, but a high wind prevented the execution of a task which was, under the most favorable conditions, attended by peril.

The roof of Seton Hall College is ninety-five feet from the ground. Above it rises the tower, fifty feet higher, and above the tower the cross, whose tip is 152 feet from the ground. As Louis clambered to his high perch the college students from below watched him. Then one called:

"Hi! there! You dare not stand on that cross!"

If there is one thing on which the young steeple-climber prides himself it is on the fact that he has never taken a dare. The cross-bar of the cross is four feet long. To this Louis climbed, and while the young men far below held their breaths, straightened himself up cautiously until he stood erect, with one foot on each side of the upright and his hands at his sides. From below came a cheer, which died away as the youths realized that his shouting might cause him to turn his eyes down and thus add to his peril. But Loerk looked straight ahead, across the pretty village of South Orange, to a point where the line of autumn foliage along the crest of the Orange Mountain met the blue.

"If I'd thought he'd have done it, I wouldn't have hollered," said the youth who had shouted the dare. But Louis was not satisfied with his feat. He was not yet as high as he possibly could get. While the lads below looked up in silent wonder they saw him put one foot on top of the upright, and then the other, and with the skill of a circus performer straightened his body and stand erect, his hands again at his sides, on the topmost pinnacle of all.

The least breath of wind might have caused him to fall. For at least a minute he stood straight as an arrow, while to the straining eyes below he seemed to swim in air. Then, with the grace of a born acrobat, he lowered himself, picked up his brush from its resting place on top of the paint-pot and went on with his work as coolly as though he had only paused to light a cigar.

Tiger and Crocodile.
Cornhill tells a true tale, which might be called a tiger-and-crocodile story. A jheal, as the author explains, is a ravine between two hills, very dry in winter and full during the monsoons; and in one, close to a small river which had overflowed its banks, a native went to bathe. He was in the water up to his neck, when a tiger on the top of the hill above set out to stalk him, and finally gave a leap toward its prey.

But the tiger was no mathematician and he had not calculated that, since his victim was much lower than himself, a leap of the right strength for a horizontal range would carry him far beyond his mark; consequently he fell some eight or ten feet on the other side of the bath.

Now it happened that a hungry crocodile was at the same time drawing a bee-line under water toward the native. When the crocodile had almost come upon his prey, he heard a splash just in front, and thinking this might be a final gambol of the bather, he made a dash, and brought his enormous jaws down upon the tiger's paw!

The bather nearly fainted with fright when he saw the tiger fall on the water, and for a few moments he could not understand why the creature did not devour him. Why did he persist in keeping one of his paws under water, beating savagely with the other, and uttering horrible growls? Most mysterious of all, the water began to turn red!

Then all at once, as the assaults of the tiger became more furious, and his growls developed into roars, the huge tail of a crocodile reared up out of the water. Then the bather realized the situation, fled up the hill, and having climbed a tree sat there to watch the outcome of the battle.

The obvious intention of the crocodile was to pull the tiger under water and drown him, and the tiger, understanding this purpose, tried to frustrate it by beating the snout of the crocodile with his other paw. But the snout was too far down, and he lost much of his force on the surface of the water. His struggles became more and more feeble, and at length he disappeared altogether, only an army of bubbles remaining to show where he had been.

Under an Avalanche.
On April third of last year there was a great snowslide in the Chilkoot Pass. Some two hundred travelers were in the pass, and about half of them were caught by the avalanche. The others went to work at once to dig them out, but only seven were rescued alive. One of these was Mr. Black, of Pennsylvania, whose experience is narrated, largely in his own words, in the Panxatway Spirit.

The slide occurred at nine o'clock in the morning, and he remained buried until five o'clock in the evening. One peculiarity of his situation when covered up with the snow, Mr. Black says, was that he could hear just as well as if he had been in the open air. The groans, prayers, lamentations and curses of those beneath the avalanche were plainly audible. Some prayed fervently, bade good-by to their near friends, and gave up. Others cursed their fate, and used their last breath to utter profanity.

"It seemed to me that I got a breath about once in five minutes. I had little hope of escape, but resolved to live as long as I could. The snow was packed so tightly about me that I could not move a fraction of an inch. I thought every time I got a breath of air that it was my last one, but I never became unconscious, and it seemed to me that I had been there at least a week when a shovel struck my shoulder, and I heard a voice saying:

"I have struck a man!"

"Is he dead or alive?" said another voice.

"I don't know," answered the man with the shovel, and he soon had my head uncovered. When I got a good breath of air, I felt that I was all right, and I said: 'There is a woman right in front of me. Dig her out. I have air now and can wait.'

"Then they proceeded to uncover Mrs. Maxson, but she was dead. You can form some idea of how solidly the snow was packed," continued Mr. Black, "when I tell you that when they had me all uncovered but one leg up to the hip, I could not get out until the snow was all shoveled away from it. I would not go through that experience again for all the gold on the Klondike."

"A Good Fight."
"What was the most desperate fight you can remember, colonel?" The question was addressed to Colonel "Rip" Ford, of the old-time Texas Rangers. The colonel—a very old man with a wealth of snow-white hair and beard—hesitated, for the question asked for quality, not quantity. After much study he told the story of a fight which occurred in 1851, and Frederick Remington repeats it in his "Crooked Trails."

"My lieutenant, Ed. Burleson, was ordered to carry to San Antonio an Indian prisoner we had taken. On his return, while nearing the Nueces River, he espied two Indians. Taking seven men, he ordered the rest to continue along the road. The two Indians proved to be fourteen, and they charged Burleson up to the teeth. Dismounting his men, he poured it into them from his Colt's six-shooting rifle. All but two of the Indians were killed or wounded, some of them dying so near the Rangers that they could put their hands on their boots.

"All but one of Burleson's men were wounded—himself shot in the head with an arrow. One man had four 'dogwood switches' (arrows) in his body, one of which was in his bowels. This man told me that every time he raised his gun to fire, the Indians would stick an arrow into him, but he said he didn't care a cent. One Indian was lying right up close, and while dying tried to shoot an arrow, but his strength failed so fast that the arrow barely left the bowstring.

"One of the Rangers in that fight was a curious fellow. When young he had been captured by Indians, and had lived with them so long that he had acquired Indian habits. In that fight he kept jumping around while loading, so as to be a bad target, the same as an Indian would under the circumstances, and he told Burleson he wished he had his boots off, so he could get around good."

Here the colonel paused quizzically. "Would you call that a good fight?" he asked.

Last of a Fierce Wild Cat.
The mounted skin of the biggest, fiercest and most aggressive wildcat ever killed in the Pennsylvania hemlock belt is on exhibition at the Selving House, Liberty, Tioga County, and Elmer Krise lost a lot of his own skin in getting it, to say nothing of the skin his horses lost. Krise was coming from Blossburg, driving Landlord Selving's team. The road passes through a wild country. As Krise was in the wildest part of it, at a spot known as Blair's Hill, a wildcat sprang from a tree at the roadside and landed with its hind feet on the back of one of the horses and its forefeet on the back of the other horse. The horses reared and plunged, and the wildcat sank its sharp claws deeper into their flesh and caught one of the horses in the neck with its teeth. The team dashed from the road into the woods, where the wagon stalled them. As they plunged about in the brush Krise jumped from the wagon, seized the wildcat by the hind legs, and dragged it from the horses. Then the savage animal turned upon Krise, who had nothing to defend himself with. In a very few seconds he was stripped of clothing by the rapid working of the wildcat's claws, and his flesh was lacerated by the animal's teeth. He fought the fierce beast as best he could, and at last succeeded in getting hold of a big stone. By a lucky blow with this he stunned the wildcat and then beat it to death.

In the meantime the horses had freed themselves and the wagon, got back into the road and ran away. Krise hung the carcass of the big wildcat over his shoulder and started after them afoot. A mile further along he came up to the team, which had been stopped by a woodsman. The horses were bleeding from deep cuts in their back where the wildcat had clawed and bitten them. Krise drove on home, ragged and bleeding. The wildcat was five feet long and weighed sixty pounds.

WHAT THE LAW DECIDES.
The appropriation for domestic and irrigation purposes of more water than is necessary is held, in Hague vs. Nephi Irrigation Co., (Utah), 41 L. R. A. 311, to leave the owner of a mill the right to take the excess for manufacturing purposes so far as necessary.

A statute prohibiting the deposit of sawdust in the waters of a lake, or in tributaries thereto, is held, in State vs. Griffin (N. H.), 41 L. R. A. 177, to be a proper exercise of the police power. With this case is a note on the statutory protection of water used for supplying a municipality.

An action against a city for a defective and dangerous street, made so by a street railway track, is held, in Schaefer vs. Fond du Lac (Wis.), 41 L. R. A. 287, to be not maintainable until all legal remedies have been exhausted against the railway company in possession of the track, as well as the owner of the track.

The right to build dams to add the floating of logs is held, in Carlson vs. St. Louis River Dam and Improvement Company (Minn.), 41 L. R. A. 371, to be subordinate to that of the riparian owner to have his land free from overflow beyond that caused by the natural condition of the stream. With this case is a note on the right to use a stream for floating logs.

Steel Rails.
Steel rails now figure as the cheapest finished product in wrought iron or steel. A good lesson in the finance of modern industry is also afforded by them. To establish a steel rail works an expenditure of $3,000,000 is required before a single rail can be turned out. The steel is made to conform to an accurate chemical composition—the most accurate in the ordinary range of technical operations.

After-Effects of the GRIP

Grip is a treacherous disease. You think it is cured and the slightest cold brings on a relapse.

Its victims are always left in a weakened condition—blood impure and impoverished; nerves shattered. Pneumonia, heart disease and nervous prostration are often the result.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People will drive every trace of the poisonous germs from the system, build up and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. A trial will prove this. Read the evidence:

When the grip last visited this section Herman H. Evers, of 811 W. Main St., Jefferson, Mo., a well-known contractor and builder, was one of the victims, and he has since been troubled with the after-effects of the disease. A year ago his health began to fail, and he was obliged to discontinue work. That he lives to-day is a miracle. He says: "I suffered with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and a general debility. My back also pained me severely. I tried one doctor after another and numerous remedies suggested by my friends, but without apparent benefit, and began to give up hope. Then I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People excelled in a St. Louis paper, and after investigation decided to give them a trial.

"After using the first box I felt wonderfully relieved and was satisfied that the pills were putting me on the road to recovery. I bought two more boxes and continued taking them. After taking four boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People I am restored to good health. I feel like a new man, and the discovery of a dry air germicide, the first ever found, that can be carried to all parts of the head, throat, and lungs in the air you breathe? No other treatment or medicine has ever created such a profound interest among the doctors, and this interest is being increased hourly by the wonderful recoveries made under their own eyes. Not alone among the medical profession has this been felt, but hundreds of thousands of men and women throughout the United States, through free treatments given, and influenced by the knowledge that their money would be returned in case of failure, have tested this new remedy, been cured, and are to-day recommending 'HYOMEL' to all their friends and acquaintances. There has been for months NO DOUBT WHAT EVER in the minds of medical men as to the efficacy of 'HYOMEL' in the treatment of Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Bronchitis and Consumption, and fathers and mothers who are acquainted with the honest method used by the R. T. Booth Co. in introducing 'HYOMEL' are not doing right by themselves, or their families, if they do not test this new treatment, which costs nothing if it fails to give relief, and can be tested free in all large cities.

'HYOMEL' CURES BY INHALATION. It is Nature's own remedy, given through the air you breathe. There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

'Hyomel' Inhaler Outfit, $1.00. Extra Bottles 'Hyomel,' 50c. 'Hyomel' Balm, a wonderful healer, 25c. Can be obtained of your druggist, AT OFFICE OR BY MAIL. Pamphlets, consultation and advice free.
