Actuated by Feelings That Most of Us Have Experienced. Two pedestrians stopped at a muddy erossing to avoid disputing the right of way with the driver of a heavily laden beer wagon. At the precises moment when one of the horses brought his big right forefoot down in a puddle of dirty water one of the waiting pedestrians, who was watching, dodged behind the other and escaped a deluge of dark choco-late colored slush. The other did not escape it. He was generously bespattered from head to foot. He turned angrily. "What did you do that for?" he de-manded, "Do what?" "Leave me to take your mud. It's a low-down, mean trick! For two cents I'd punch your head!" "Sny, what's ailing you? Did I throw any of that mud on you?" "I'm not any man's mud fender. I want you to understand, b'gosh!" "Don't watt a mixup with a man as dirty as you are." "Then you want to keep mighty civil, Goshblamed shirk. Supposs I had dodge behind you!" "You'd look' a thunderin' sight cleaner that you do now if yon had. You didn't think of it, and I did. That's all that alls you, except that you need." "Oh, I guess not. Look here. You're a jealous, small-minded, mean-hearted, snarling, en-vious, soreleaded, lop-eared hyena of a man, who'd kick if you were going to heaven in a chariot of fire unless there was a dining car along. Come on if you want any trouble with me, you dirty faced...." But at this juncture the crossing policeman interfered.

There was a shoemaker I met not fong ago, says a writer in Chambers's Journal, who had a most elaborate method of keeping his "books." Against the wall of his workshop he had a large board erected, which he painted black. Into this board he used to drive hobnails, tacks, brass and steel rivets, and other nails used in his trade, to represent work done. For instance, the soling of a pair of boots would be represented by a small piece of leather tacked on to the board by means of a brass rivet; but if the boots were hobnailed, then a hobnail was used instead of the brass rivet. A steel rivet indicated a patch on the sole, and a patch on the upper was shown by the. Awords were also the hier-elyphics representing the customers' names. A London paper tells this story of the final signing of the pence treaty: "Every diplomatic instrument bears a seal from which depends a ribbon, and when the scal is about to be affixed to the treaty the commissioners, both of Spain and America, expressed a de-sire, in graceful acknowledgment of the courtesy shown by France, that the dependent ribbon should be tri-colored. Search was forthwith mad-high and low in the Quai d'Orsay, with the result that in the Foreign Office of the French Republic not a bit of ribbon of the French colors could be found. At this critical junc-ture a brilliant inspiration flashed across one of the heads of the depart-ment. 'Go,' he said to a messenger, 'to M. "Lots of it," was the laconic reply, as the official received a coin. "Yes, you must see all phases of it. For instance..." "For instance, if a man has a plugged quarter on hand he tries to work it off on me!" finished the con-ductor as he returned the coin. Declers in the Arctic Are Great Drinkers The dwellers in the Soudan or the Sahara, of course, you would suggest. But you would be quite wrong. It is not the tribes who dwell in the flery deserts of the tropics who drink most water in a day. Far from it. They are, as a rule, most temperate in all things. Unlikely as it may seem, it is just the last people you would ima-gine—the dwellers in the frozen north, the Esquimaux—says the Philadelphia Record. They seem to have a thirst which is quite unquenchable, and for that purpose they are constantly melt-ing snow and lee over the lamp which, if ed by blubber, burns day and night in every hut. Small wonder that the soapstone out of which these lamps are made is to the still uncivilized Esqui-maux the most valuable of possessions, and that they will make long journeys to secure pieces large enough to carve to a circle, and the wick of dry moss, rubbed between the hands with a lit-tile far. It supplies itself with oil by melting a long thin slip of blubber hung above the fame. Sometimes abstitutes for the soapstone lamps are made by the women, by cementing to getter pieces of other stone with a composition of clay, hair and seals' blood, but they are never very satis-factory.
