They're Only Artesians.

During the recent strike of ladies' lors the proprietor of a well-known prown establishment was endeavoring to explain to an interested customer the difference between the kind of work which is done in an establishment like his and that done by the shambling wretches who were fighting for "recognition" and their right to better pay. "You see," he explained, "men who never see a fine garment on a lady and who have no opportunity to observe and learn what good style is cannot be expected to turn out artistic work. They can never hope to become artists; they are simply artesians."

"Here," shouted the balliff, "you can't gun here. These are private grounds." "But I thought this was the open season for game," protested the sportsman.—Philadelphia North when covered up with the snow, Mr. Black says, was that be could hear in the open air. The groams, prayers, lamentations and curses of those beneath the avalanche were plainly audible. Some prayed fervently, bade good-by to their near friends, and gave up. Others cursed their fate, and used their last breath to utter profamity.

"It seemed to me that I got a breath about once in five minutes. I had little hope of escape, but resolved to live as long as I could. The snow was packed so tightly about me that I could not move a fraction of an inch. I thought every time I got a breath of air that it was my last one, but I never became unconscious, and it seemed to me that I had beet there at least a week when a shovel struck my shoulder, and I heard a voice saying:

"I have struck a man."

"Is he dead or alive?" said another voice.

"I don't know,' answered the man with the shovel, and he soon had my head uncovered. When I got a good breath of air, I felt that I was all right, and I said: There is a woman right in front of me. Dig her out. I have sir now and can wait."

"Then they proceeded to uncover Mrs. Maxon, but she was dead. You can form sone idea of how solidly the snow was packed," continued Mr. Black, "when I tell you that when they had me all uncovered but ogs leg up to the hip, I could not get out until the snow was all shoveled away from it. I would not go through that experience again for all the gold or the Klondike."

Grip is a treacherous disease. You think a stream of the slightest cold brings on a relapse.

Its victims are always left in a weakened condition—blood impure and impoverished; nerves shattered. Pneumonia, heart disease and nervous prostration are often the result.

Dr. Williams' Pink PiHs for Pale People will drive every trace of the poisonous germs from the system, build up and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. A trial will prove this. Read the evidence:
