J. E. Trole in "The Bells." Mahanoy City American, September 14, 1860. You cannot always toll by the prices of admission the value of a theatrical performance, and that is where some people have been mislead as to the J. E. Toole company, now filling an engage-ment at kaler's Grand opera house. Of all the repertoire companies that come to Mahanoy City, nome are more worthy of crowded houses. Last evening the piece was Henry Irving's version of "Mathias, the Bells, or the Murder of the Polish Jew." Mr. Toole filled the roll of the burgomaster who had murder-det he Jow and became rich. After fifteen years and just as he is marrying off his only child to a man of high char-acter, remorse scizes him. His portrayal of the conscience-stricken murderer was a spiendid bit of work, which gave evidence of his high attainments as an actor. As usual the support was good and the stage setting and effects in good taste. Specialties of a high order are promised for this evening.
