FREELAND, PA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1899.

"Faust" Last Evening. Lowis Morrison's "Faust" was pro-duced at the Grand opera house last evening. Of the play, which is now so well known to opera-goers everywhere, little need be said beyond the noting of the fact that it was all that the management of the company and the house had promised for it. Every char-acter was in capable hands, the cos-tomes were in keeping with the high tone of the people who wore them, the special scenery was a mass of beautiful and artistic work, and the scenic effects, especially the Brocken scene, were really wonderful.

especially the Brocken scene, were really wonderful. The attendance exceeded all expecta-tions and certainly entitles Freeland to a place in the list of towns where high-class plays are appreciated. Notwith-standing the advance in prices, every seat in the building was sold before the curtain rose. Later the sales of admis-sion to the gallery were suspended, as no more could be squeezed into that portion of the honse, and at 8.30 o'clock comfortable standing room was at a premium in every part of the building. The total number of admissions amount-ed to 1,108 and the gross receipts were $478.15 $478.15

This series of meetings will be in charge of Messrs. Armstrong and Bry-den, who have labored so successfully elsewhere, assisted by the ministers of the local churches. It is urgently re-quested that all Christian workers of town shall be present at all these meet-ings and help in every possible way to make them a power for good.

When You May Hunt.

When You May Hunt. At this time of the year many inquir-ies are made in reference to the game laws and as the hunting season will soon open we publish the time when the various kinds of game may be shot, and every sportsman should cut it out and paste it on his game bag. In Pennsyl-vania the open season for wild turkeys, pheasant, grouse, quail, partridge and squirrel, is from October 15 to December 15; woodcock during the same period; rail and reel birds, September 1 to De-cember 1; elk and deer, (no dogs to be used) November 1 to December 1; hares and rabbits, November 1 to December 1; hares

The funeral of Miss Bella O'Donnell on Monday morning was largely attend-ed by the friends and acquaintances of the deceased. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. A requiem mass was read by Rev. Francis Mack, who also delivered a sermon in keeping with the sad occasion. The Daughters of Mary Sodality attended the funeral in a body. Yesterday afternoon a large number of people gathered at the home of the late Mrs. Anna E. Kline to pay their last respects to the deceased. Services were conducted by Rev. J. B. Kersch-ner and Rev. J. J. Kuntz. The remains were then interred in Freeland ceme-

Social Last Evening. At the residence of Rev. J. B. Kersch At the residence of Rev. J. B. Kørsch-ner last evening a goodly number of members of St. John's Reformed church gathered and held a most pleasant social meeting. The visit was a decided surprise to the family of Rev. Kersch-ner, and as everybody brought along a substantial token of their good will the evening hours were spent in a manne-highly agreeable to all. At a season-able hour the assemblage dispersed after brief devotional services.

Model Towns Not Successful. From the Philadelphia Inquirer. The announcement that a big Chicago coal dealer intends to erect in this state a model mining town along the lines that Pullman presented as a manu-facturing centre is most interesting to those who have followed the faste of a number of similar enterprises. Model towns without number have been start-ed, and without number have been start-ed, and without number have failed to perpetuate themselves, and their gloomy ruins dot the state from end to end. For a time each has experienced its period of prosperity and then it has faded away, its people have left and only a few deserted houses mark the spots where they have been located. In Pullman there was no trouble so long as the man who started the town load by with his death it mas found Coal Region Men Who Are Known Throughout the Whole Country. James A. Miller, of Athens, Ohio, who was at the recent Philadelphia encamp-ment promoted to the office of flect commander, is a former resident of Tamaqua. Mr. Miller is a printer and was engaged in business in Tamaqua as a young man before the war. Mr. Miller's history as a naval veteran is as interesting as it has been eventful. He served during the civil war in the South Atlantic squadron until the battle of Mobile bay, in August, 1865. He was blown up by a torpedo on the Tecumsch, August 5. 1865, and was one of the nine transferred to the Mississippi squadron, and remained in that until discharged, June 17, 1865, as cosswain. the control of his estate could not run a factory and a town at the same time, and so the model town that was has passed into the hands of regular politi-cal parties organized to run it. If the Chicago man wants to start a model town in this state we say that he is more than welcome, but unless he profits by the failures of the past his town will last only so long as he is personally able to direct it.

Floading the Dadson Mine. The water which is being poured into the Dadson shaft at Plymouth to drown out the fire has reached a point fifty-six feet high in the shaft and is now pouring into the Cooper, the Bennett and the five-foot veins. It is estimated that by Saturday the fire will be reached. The water will be allowed to remain a few weeks and then will be pumped out, and this will take several months. It is not certain that the fire will be quenched, for the water may be held back from it by alr or gas. In this case it will have to be flooded again and then a bore hole sunk as a vent for the imprisoned air and gases. Mine big pumps are now at work and they empty into the mine thirteen mil-lion gallons of water every twenty-four hours. The Lance collery adjoining is shut
