Few plays produced within the last ten years possess more genuine human interest than "The Stowaway," which is booked for the Grand opera house tonight. Its success has been phenomenal, exceeding that of any English melodrama ever brought to this country. Its story appeals to the best emotions in man, and it presents a series of picturesque and realistic scenes illustrating life, not only in the mysterious depths of London, but in the sweet and fragrant countryside as well.

Its exciting incidents, natural in the developments, betray the hand of a master in dramatic construction and win applause from all classes. The eye is pleased with the vivid realism achieved by the art of the stage mechanic, who have contrived to give to "The Stowaway" a more elaborate setting than was ever before given an English drama.

than was ever before given an English drama.

The lover of sensationalism in its best and dignified sense will find the blowing open of a burglar-proof safe by these two expert but now reformed cracksmen, "Spike" Hennessey and "Kid" McCoy, one of the most thrilling incidents in the whole range of the drama. The company is classed as one of the strongest on the road and has been recently notably reinforced by the engagement of "Big Bill" Boyd as understudy to "Spike" Hennessey.

The first sensation came in the original trial of the case of the injured young man, when, after a verdict had been rendered in favor of the defendant, the late Judge Connolly summarily set the verdict aside as being against the evidence. After that sensation followed sensation in such quick succession as to make the case celebrated, not only in the country, but throughout the state. It the case celebrated, not only in the county, but throughout the state. It even received columns of space in the great metropolitan newspapers.

There was a direct clash of expert testimony as to the seriousness of young Jennings injuries, and Mr. Jennings and his attorneys claimed that the railroad company had procured somebody to falsely personate the injured boy and undergo examination before the doctors whose testimony indicated that the injuries were slight, and that the malformation of the breast, the chief basis for damages, was congential and not a result of the accident. The truth of this allegation was never established.
