Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out, and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Hawaiian Commerce.

The Hawaiian islands are an example of commercial development under a close or protected system. It was in 1866 that the islands first touched an interest of $1,000,000 in our import trade, chiefly through the whale-fisheries, as they made a convenient stopping place for American whalers. The interest was not doubled until the reciprocity treaty went into effect (1877), and sugar became the great article of commerce, with rice as the second in importance, but representing only one-tenth the value of the sugar. The granting of free entry into the United States for these two products was equivalent to remitting to the Hawaiian planters the sum of $1,000,000 a year, every dollar of which acted as a bounty on production. It was natural to find that so liberal a gift was soon appreciated, and the energies of the islands were directed into laying out plantations of sugar and rice. As rice proved of uncertain profit the cultivation for export has not prospered, although the domestic consumption increased through the influx of Asiatics. The exports of this grain were 2,250,000 pounds in 1876, attained a maximum of 13,684,200 pounds in 1887, and are now about 5,500,000 pounds a year.—Harper's Magazine.

A Burglary Story.

They were telling "burglary stories" on the veranda in front of the grocery store in a down-east town. "The man's hand was thrust through the hole he had cut in the door," said the star talker, "when the woman seized the wrist and held on in spite of the struggles of the man outside. In the morning the burglar was found dead, having cut his own throat when he found escape impossible; but the brave woman had not known he was dead, and so had not released her grasp on his wrist all night long." "Huh!" growled the skeptic in the corner; "why didn't she feel of his pulse?"—Buffalo Commercial.

A Modern Instance.

The wonderful advance made in the science of farming during the last few years is one of the best examples of American progressiveness. A little incident recounted by the Ashtabula (Ohio) Sentinel is characteristic. One evening, a short time ago, a society in Jefferson needed a gallon of cream. The committee called up by telephone the proprietors of a milk farm two miles north of the town, and asked if they could furnish it. The reply was that they could as soon as milking was done. In thirty minutes from the time the call was made, the cream was delivered. The milk had been drawn from the cow, put into a separator, the cream extracted and sent to town by a man on a bicycle. A few years ago the committee would have had to send a boy in the afternoon, "yesterday's milk" would have had to be skimmed, and if the boy had not treed too many chipmunks on the way, he might have got back in time for the festival.

A Gentle Hint.

A singular custom prevails among the Tartars or Kurds. If a man loses his cattle or other property he pours a little brown sugar into a piece of colored cloth, ties it up and carries one such parcel to each of his friends and acquaintances. In return he is presented, according to circumstances, with a cow or sheep or a sum of money.

THE PANIC OF 1893.

HOW THE PEOPLE WERE MADE TO SUFFER FOR BANKS.

The Sherman Law Had Raised the Price of Wheat and This Vexed England Into a Plan to Secure Its Immediate Repeal—History of a Crime.

The distraught leaders and aspirants in both the great political parties of the country begin to feel the working of the yeast of knowledge on one subject above all others, for the plain reason that it is beginning to be understood at last that the monetary panic and consequent demoralization of all business industries was due to a fixed purpose rather than to any chance combination or mesalliance of events and circumstances, and that the plan was as much a deliberate conception, undertaken with cold calculation, as any scheme of a band of wreckers to get possession of a treasure ship in the offing of a reef-fringed ocean island. The order issued to the 3,700 national banks by the management of the associated system on the 12th of March, 1893, for the purpose of securing concerted action for the objects indicated in the circular, was the signal gun of this nefarious war. It recited that "the interests of national banks require immediate financial legislation by congress." It declared that "silver, silver certificates, and treasury notes must be retired, and national bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money." This, it further stated, would require the authorization of "from $400,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation." The banks were therefore ordered to retire their loans. Then this cold blooded and piratical order said: "Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men." And it directed them to advocate an extra session of congress for the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman law, and to act with other banks in getting up a large petition to congress for its unconditional repeal, according to a form accompanying the circular. And it affirmed in conclusion that "the future life of national banks as fixed and safe investments" depended upon immediate action, "as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of government legal tender notes and silver coinage." Here stands the plot revealed. After such a showing, it looked well to see the Eckelses and Hamlins of the treasury department sounding their alarm gong that free coinage men were guilty of disturbing business prosperity by destroying public confidence. First, they overturn and undermine all the normal conditions of the country's finances themselves, and then they turn and denounce those who seek only the restoration of what maintained the country in its course of prosperity. And these are the men who assume to guard our finances and govern our policy. The distinctly declared purpose was to create a monetary panic, or at least "a money stringency," which was to be charged to the exportation of gold in amount sufficient to determine the necessity of an extra session of congress. The object of an extra session was to establish an exclusive gold basis for our currency. Then, to procure such legislation as would retire all existing forms of paper money, and give to the banks power to issue the only money outside the metallic limit. Finally, to load the people with a heavy debt, payable principal and interest in gold, which debt was to be the special interest of the banks themselves, by furnishing them with a bond basis for this paper currency. And all obviously to gratify the greed of foreign money lenders hungering for another thousand million United States bonds, redeemable only in gold, which these same foreign money lenders had persuaded us to accept, discarding constitutional silver, as the exclusive money of this country. The work was done according to the design. All the national banks of the country proceeded to withdraw a third of their circulation from business use, solely in obedience to the order from the money center. Then they called in one-half of their loans, which at the time aggregated not less than $1,000,000,000. Simultaneously they served notice on their customers that further loans and discounts would cease, and that all obligations then outstanding must be met as they came due without further extension. The result was exactly what the conspiring money power had calculated. The money market became stringent instantaneously, no one could tell how or why. Failures were precipitated right and left. The banks themselves went down by the wholesale, the explanation adroitly given for so unprecedented an occurrence being that the falling banks had been doing business on unsound principles. In order to more fully understand the method, purpose and spirit of this purely predatory conspiracy, having its long tap root in England, in Lombard street, in a mere handful of powerful banking houses in London and on the continent, we must next proceed to observe the effect of this bank order in the way of contraction, since stringency was the thing aimed at in order to force a call of congress and compel its favorable legislation. First followed, as stated, the abrupt retirement of one-third of the bank circulation. Then, upon the repeal of the Sherman law, the monthly purchase of about $3,500,000 of silver ceased. Next followed an additional contraction of $50,000,000 from the purchase of new bonds issued to hold up gold resumptions. And to cap and crown the whole, the banks began to hoard gold for the purchase of bonds as their diminishing reserves might require under the law. The gold received by them in daily balance goes into New York safe deposit vaults. Against these deposits clearinghouse certificates are issued, to be circulated among the banks only, and to be counted as part of the weekly bank reserves. Ever since the repeal of the Sherman law this hoarding of gold and issue of clearinghouse certificates has steadily gone on, and only the banks themselves know the amount of gold that has been hoarded and taken out of circulation. And the rigidly righteous comptroller of the currency winked at this wholly illegal practice, while he notoriously would make precipitate haste to prevent the people, instead of the banks, from employing a similar currency to ward off their ruin. The subterfuges, misrepresentations, misleading statements, and actual falsehoods invented and uttered by the associated money power and its obedient and subsidized press to make the public believe the situation was due to natural rather than to wholly unnatural and indefensible causes, form a very substantial part of the history of this ill-starred financial panic, confessedly more purely unnecessary and iniquitous than all similar distressful events since the country had a national beginning. The banks turned and brazenly accused the people of hoarding the money and thus making it scarce. Then they charged that the country banks kept it back, and refused in the timidity of ignorance to let it out into the customary channels of circulation and use. It is a well-authenticated statement that when the panic had reached its zenith there was $35,000,000 more money in New York banks than at the corresponding period of the year previous! The bank reserves steadily increased beyond all previous record. Well may it be asked, if money is something for facilitating the business of the great body of people, or if it is merely an instrument of oppression and distress, to be put into the hands of a favored power for its enrichment and enlargement at the cost of the helpless sufferers. Heretofore, when the money market became severely stringent, both the banks and the government came to its speedy relief; in the present instance alone has that relief, never so urgently demanded as now, been coldly refused, while the people themselves are charged with being the author of their own calamities by their ignorantly willful hoarding of money! It is nowise difficult to understand where the present financial troubles originated, the motive that inspired them, and the fatuity of expecting any real release from them until the conditions which made them possible are wholly and thoroughly removed. One thing is rendered practically certain by the direful experience the people are needlessly passing through: That a diminishing money volume cannot be made to answer the increasing needs of our modern industrial and business life, and that our growing civilization demands a medium of exchange adequate to the required stimulation of the universal productive power, rather than that of the wealth-absorbing power of a limited class whose interests center almost entirely in themselves. When, as the national census tells us, 31,000 individuals own one-half of the country's wealth, it is time to turn the subject over and consider it from its other side. And that is just what the people are seriously engaged in doing now, for which they are derided and denounced by a subborned and servile press, with hindering the general prosperity.

GEORGE CANNING HILL.

Sherman in 1878.

Treasury Department, July 15, 1878.

—Dear Sir: To that part of your letter of the 12th inst., in which you ask my views of the matter confided in the monetary commission, I have some delicacy in replying very fully. During the monetary conference in Paris, when silver in our country was excluded from circulation by being undervalued, I was strongly in favor of the single standard of gold, and wrote a letter which you will find in the proceedings of that conference, stating briefly my views. At that time the wisest of us did not anticipate the sudden fall of silver or the rise of gold that has occurred. This uncertainty of the relation between the two metals is one of the chief arguments in favor of a monometallic system. But other arguments, showing the dangerous effects upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value, outweigh in my mind all theoretical objections to the bimetallic system. I am thoroughly convinced that if it were possible for the leading commercial nations to fix by agreement an arbitrary relation between silver and gold, even though the market value might vary somewhat from time to time, it would be a measure of the greatest good to all nations. My earnest desire is that you may succeed in doing this. You are so well informed upon this subject that it is not worth while for me to enlarge upon it. The statements and documents sent you by the director of the mint will give in authentic form most of the material facts which bear upon the question, and your own investigation on the silver commission will, I am quite sure, supply any deficiency. Very truly yours, JOHN SHERMAN.

THE SHIRT-WAIST.

ON A PREVAILING STYLE

It surely is the prettiest style
By fashion ere presented!
We gaze, entranced, and muse the while
On how it was invented.

For ages it had dormant lain,
Nor seer, nor prophet named it;
Of what sex was the gifted brain
That first evolved and framed it?

For, whether made of silk or crepe,
Of linen, lawn or satin,
The same grace it can deftly drape
The slender and the fat in.

We see it in more various hues
Than ever rainbow sported—
Crimsons and yellows, greens and blues
All sorts, and unassorted.

It lends a charm, familiar, dear
To even the statliest woman;
'Twould make a goddess seem more near,
More kissable and human.

Neat, modest, saucy, simple, gay,
Chic, knowing, stylish, clever—
The shirt-waist! It has come to stay,
And may it stay—forever!

She had intended to corner him, but after thinking the matter over for a few seconds she decided that there was really nothing further to be said on the subject.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Way of Wisdom.

Those who are familiar with the literature and history of the world have learned that some things have been settled for all time by conclusive experiments. In religion, in politics, in social life, in everything to which man has given his attention, hopeless essays have been made repeatedly by the unlearned and discontented to better their condition. They who are well instructed often at a glance can see how hopeless is some well-meant struggle. But they who have no knowledge of the experience of the past, reaching beyond the memory of a generation, reject the counsel of the wise, and suffer needless loss. The student, noting some new outbreak of this hopeless kind, knows that, if he goes back to the time when the fathers of the present generation were young, he will find the same phenomenon. To prevent this waste of energy, more knowledge is needed. There is a way out of or over every difficulty which besets human society. The right way is an easy way. It is the way of wisdom and understanding, and it is open to all who seek it.—Christian Register.

Fortune-Telling Teacups.

A woman recently retured from London says that telling fortunes in a teacup was the popular fad there during the season. Special teacups are sold for the purpose. These are abnormally wide and deep and have their insides covered with a perfect network of lines, and a border of the signs of the zodiac and various astrological emblems. When the guest has finished his tea the hostess assumes the role of seeress. She solemnly examines the position of the tea leaves in connection with the lines and signs and foretells the future according to them.—Chicago Tribune.

Extraordinary Case of Blood-Poisoning.

An extraordinary case of blood-poisoning is reported by a Vienna journal. The victim was a young girl named Schwartz, aged 22. Some days ago she went for a walk wearing a green silk blouse. She became overheated, and the dye of the material ran. Unhappily she had sustained some trifling accidental wound under the arm, and the pigment got into the blood. Upon returning home she complained of pain, but would not consent to a medical examination. The injured spot became greatly inflamed, causing intense suffering, and on the following day the physician discovered the cause. Remedies were immediately applied, but it was too late, and after a brief illness the girl died.

Pictorial Postcard Craze.

Some idea of the pictorial postcard craze in Germany is given by the figures just published by our consul at Frankfort, says the London Globe. About 12,000 workmen are employed in producing these postal souvenirs, and it is estimated that every day about 100 new designs are published. Allowing for each card an issue of 1,000 only—and this is a modest estimate—it means a total of 100,000 per day, or something like 30,000,000 per annum. Since the introduction of the souvenir card the number of postcards dispatched in Germany has increased by 12,000,000. The latest cards are a great improvement on the earlier ones, and some bear etchings by artists of repute.

Saved Through Chess.

In 1396 Mohammed Balba usurped the crown of Granada in spite of the superior claims of his elder brother Jussef. He was very unsuccessful in his conduct of the war against the Christians and was at length assassinated by poison absorbed through his skin from a shirt. He entertained a desperate dislike to the brother whom he had injured, and when he knew that his own fate was sealed he sent an order to the governor of the prison in which Jussef was confined that he should be executed immediately. When the order arrived Jussef was playing chess with the chaplain of the prison. With great difficulty Jussef obtained a respite from the governor permitting him to finish the game. Before it was ended, however, news came that the usurper had died of the poison. This canceled the order of execution and Jussef, instead of going to the scaffold, mounted the throne.

EVERY woman suffering from any female trouble can be helped by Mrs. Pinkham. This statement is based on sound reasoning and an unrivalled record. Multitudes of America's women to-day bless Mrs. Pinkham for competent and common-sense advice. Write to her if you are ill. Her address is Lynn, Mass. Absolutely no charge is made for advice. "I suffered seven years and would surely have died but for your help," writes MRS. GEO. BAINBRIDGE, Morea, Pa., to Mrs. Pinkham. "It is with pleasure I now write to inform you that I am now a healthy woman, thanks to your kind advice and wonderful medicine. I can never praise it enough. I was a constant sufferer from womb trouble, and leucorrhœa, had a continual pain in abdomen. Sometimes I could not walk across the floor for three or four weeks at a time. Since using your medicine, I now have no more bearing-down pains, or tired feelings, and am well and hearty. I shall recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my suffering friends as the greatest remedy for all female weakness."

SAFE COUNSEL FOR SICK WOMEN

MRS. SUSIE J. WEAVER, 1821 Callowhill St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I had inflammation of the womb and painful menstruation, and by your advice I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Have taken four bottles and used one package of Sanative Wash and feel like a new woman. I thank you so much for what your medicine has done for me."

MRS. M. BAUMANN, 771 W. 21st St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "After two months' trial of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I can not say enough in praise for it. I was a very sick woman with womb trouble when I began its use, but now I am well."
