row Turn-Over Collars. An out-of-town friend sent me a clipping from a magazine, which stated that tailor-made suits might be had for $\frac{8}{5}$ up. She enclosed $\frac{1}{5}$, and minute directions as to cut, color, material, etc. I knew before I started out just what a wild goose chase I was destined for, but she was a dear friend and I resolved to take nothing for granted.

was destined for, but she was a dear friend and I resolved to take nothing for granted.

I wasted two whole days, spent two dollars in carfare and luncheon, lost my patience, aroused the ire of divers saleswomen because I tried to get a stylish, well-made gown for the money. I found at last the exact copy of the cut she sent me, and the price was $40.

The so-called bargains in the big department stores are bargains only when the purchaser can remodel the sarment that is slightly behind the style and adapt it to her needs. The exhorbitant prices asked for some gowns and coats often apparently have no cause for being. It may be due to the special cut, the use of an exclusive material or an unusual amount of handwork that often doubles the actual cost of the garment. Fashionable women who order their gowns from Paris, or can buy the latest importations, have already discarded a fashion by the time the great feminine world is wearing it on the street, so the woman who is not particular as to the latest mode can often pick up beautiful costumes at a low cost, but they cannot always be had pick up beautiful costumes at a low cost, but they cannot always be had by seeking.

cost, but they cannot always be had by seeking.

Except for fleeting styles, it pays to buy good materials and well-made trimmings. One clever woman, who does most of her own dressmaking and makes her hats says she is very careful to buy the best her purse affords, and the moment the trimming becomes out of date she rips it off and lays it saide, knowing that in "seven years" it will be in style again. She has an ermine collar on her new tallor-made suit that was a Christmas present when she was nine years old, and a white evening waist adorned with silk fringe that decorated her comencement gown years ago.

"I never give away finery," she says.

"If a friend needs anything that I have for a certain purpose, I am generous, but indiscriminate giving is worth nothing and never appreciated."

Fur hats are especially fashionable, and if you have any scraps of fur, you can, if you are caveful, make a toque yourseif, while sable and chinchilla are the favorites, other furs make pretty combinations. To cut fur, lay it face downward on a board and cut on the skin side vith a sharp knife. Sew it overhand un the wrong side and smooth the seam with the fingers.

The very narrow turn over white collars can easily be made at home. These are made of sheerest cambric, Fawn or mull with the finest hand embroidery or edged with real lace. Dainty embroidered handkerchiefs are used for this purpose or even the sheer hemstitched ones. These turned over collars are sipped into a band the width of an orilinary stock collar.

used for this purpose or even the sheer hemstitched ones. These turned over collars are slipped into a band the width of an oxidinary stock collar, and this band is sufficiently stiff to give support to the tile that is worn. A vivid contrast to the animal scarfs and boas seen at a recent festival was a boa made entirely of violets. Another remarkable specimen in neckwars is a very short chiffon cape and long ends made of chenille fringe and sable fur.

Silks, gauzes and velvets are all painted by hand and used as trimming. Of course, the work must be exquisitely done, for there is nothing more ugly than crude painting on a handsome gown, and even when well done, must be used most sparingly. The aim of dressmakers is to make the waist appear as long as possible, and belts, when worn, should be quite inconspicuous. On many of the cloth gowns the waists are put over the skirt and then the finish is the narrowest possible bias band with machine stitching, the ends of which cross in front or at the back with hook and eye.

strictions in front or at the back with hook and eye. Fancy muffs are to be the style, and all the good costumes now have muffs made especially for them. They are very small affairs, these fancy are very small afairs, these fancy are composed cost a large price. Lace and fur are combined in a most charming haphazard way, with an utter dispressionally a bunch of very line artificial flowers. None of these muffs are large, and apparently are in contrast to the large muffs of fur that are so smart with the tailor gowns. Bear fur, the black, the gray and the cinnamon bear muffs with long boas to match, are considered particularly desirable this year, and when a woman is tall enough to wear them without looking like a bear cub herself, the effect is certainly very good. Sable and mink are as popular as ever, while chinchilla is used as commonly as though it were torchon lace.

The princesse style of dress is becoming more and more fashionable, as more and more dressmakers are learning how to turn out a good-looking gown made in this style. A garment that used to be called the polonaise is more often seen than a whole princesse gown, although it is called by the latter name. It is a long, tight-fitting coat worn over quife a long skirt made of the same material, and a flounce of the underskirt shows below the coat. This coax fastens at the left side, or in the front, and, as a rula whetever trigoming there is is
