"What Happened to Reilly," which appears here tomorrow evening, is stated to be one of the best farce-comedies that has been produced in this country in recent years. It is meeting with marked success wherever played, and according to its manager, its found to duplicate the success of "The City Directory," and Hoty's "Trip to Chinatown." While not unlike these two frattling pieces, it possesses a comedy interest not often found in plays of this type, and above all, it is said to keep the audience in a roar of laughter from the rise to the fall of the curtain.

Death Roll of the Mines.

Mine Inspector William H. Davies reports ten fatal and eleven non-fatal accidents for the month of January in this, the Fifth anthracite district, leaving five widows and seventeen orphans. Three of the victims were injured in the mines and died of the result of their injuries, while the other result of their injuries, while the other seven met death on the surface. This is the largest number of fatal accidents reported for one month in many years, and it is hoped that its record will not be equalled by any other month in 1900.
