The Benefits of Early Rising.

It was once laid down by a celebrated writer and historian that the difference between rising at 5 and 7 in the morning for the space of forty years, supposing a man to go to bed at the same hour every night, is nearly equivalent to the addition of ten years to the life. This consideration should carry very great weight and be sufficient to induce those who have not hitherto practiced this habit to commence to do so more especially the people who are always complaining that life is not long enough for them to transact all the work that they have to perform. There is much foundation for their complaint if they persist in wasting so many valuable hours of the day in bed. The advantages and benefits of early rising cannot be over-estimated: in the early hours of the morning the brain is clearer and more ready for work and after a night's sleep we should be ready to attack the work of the day.

What do the Children Drink?

Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called GRAIN-O? It is delicious and nourishing and takes the place of coffee.

The more Grain-O you give the children the more healthily they distribute through their systems. Grain-O is made of pure grains, and when properly prepared tastes like the choice grades of coffee but costs about 1/2 as much. All grocers sell it. 15c. and 25c.

Try Grain-O!

Insist that your grocer gives you GRAIN-O Accept no imitation.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN.

Crepe de Chine Ties.
Long crepe de chine ties with ringed ends are wound about the neck on days not cold enough for fur collars.

The Popular Revers.
Another fashion which is forging to the front is white broadcloth revers on dark Etou jackets. This broadcloth is stitched with white silk thread in diamond shape. Satin revers are used almost entirely on fur coats. White satin is the favorite.

Red a Favorite Tint.
Red, running through the gamut of its glowing shades, from the royal damask and Jaque rose tints to light cherry dye, will appear as a favorite accessory on spring costumes of gray, brown, certain shades of green and blue, and notably on black costumes, jackets, capes and hats.

The Prettiest Giraffe.
Very pretty giraffes are made of velvet sewn with steel or jet beads in an elaborate pattern and with a fringe of the beads falling in front. This fringe may be any length desired, but is always V-shaped, and usually about eight inches deep in the center, grading in length to the sides. Collars made in similar style are worn with these giraffes.

New Models Outline the Hips.
The newest models snatched from the arena of strife outline the hips almost as closely as did the eelskin. Plaits and tucks of almost infinite variety have been conceded, but they are flatter and more firmly stitched down than in November, and, though the dominance of the overskirt is undisputed, it is not yet draped, unless the draperies are kept very low.

The Czarina's Shawl.
The Czarina has a shawl which she values very highly. It was sent to her by the ladies of Orenburg, a town in Southeastern Russia. It reached her in a wooden box, with silver hooks and hinges, the outside being embellished with designs of spears, turbans, whips, etc., on a ground of blue enamel, that being the color of the Cossack uniform. The shawl is about ten yards square and exquisitely fine.

Vice Versa Skirts and Bodices.
An artistic maker of frocks bewails the fact that the gathered skirt is gathered in the back and at the sides while the front is left perfectly plain; the bodice on the other hand is full and slightly pouched in front, but plain and close fitting at the back. The artistic maker of frocks says that this is contrary to all rules of grace and beauty, as the fullness of the skirt should be, at least in appearance, continued on the bodice, and vice-versa.

Small Wedding Invitations.
From Paris comes a wedding invitation, five by four-and-a-half inches in size, engraved in the new and fashionable block lettering. It is not an essentially French form, and is sent by American residents in the City of Light. The tiny sheet of paper looks very odd to eyes accustomed to the large sheets used for wedding invitations on this side of the water. The block letters are also a bit unusual, although they are much used on this side for calling, at home, cards, etc. Engraving these letters is a trifle more expensive than script. Script engraving is charged for at so much per line, while the block letters are so much each letter.

Woman Lawyers Barred.
The State Supreme Court at Dover, Del., has ruled that no woman lawyer can practice her profession in that State. Horace C. Knowles asked that Mrs. Carrie B. Killgore, the well-known attorney of Philadelphia, be allowed to appear with him in a suit, Chancellor Nicholas, for the court, replied that while they would like to extend every courtesy to attorneys from a sister State, the request could not be granted because of a provision of the new Constitution.

That instrument provides that officers of the State shall be voters, and the lawyers have interpreted this to mean that attorneys are officers of the court, and must therefore be males. Mrs. Killgore was very indignant over the decision and will call it to the attention of the Philadelphia courts.

Sleeves Plain and Fancy.
Most sleeves are as severe in outline and as devoid of fullness as the sleeves of a man's coat. To those whose arms will not bear such a classical outline, however, some latitude is allowed; two small capes often spring from the shoulder line, and a pretty sleeve has the material carried up to within a couple of inches of the seam, when it is stopped short with sometimes a row of stitching, sometimes the raw edge left, to show a puffing or ruffling of silk or velvet. This gives breadth across the chest, which is necessary to some figures. Another variation of the sleeve modish has a slashing right down the outside arm to the elbow or wrist, laced across with cords to show an insertion of silk underneath. One pretty sleeve in a tailor-made gown was buttoned and buttoned from shoulder to wrist, forty buttons and buttonholes in all, an endless labor, but it seemed a perfectly fitting sleeve on a well-modelled arm.

The Remodeled Kimono.
A kimono wrapper treated as kimonos are now would be a revelation to the Japanese, who first invented the custom, but a more comfortable bed-room wrapper can scarcely be devised. The Persian figured silk lined with albatross cloth, and lined with the bands of silk in some plain colors, has rather superseded the simpler gowns of light wool and flannel, but both in their turn are to be ousted by the quilted silk wrappers, that are now sold at prices that make them popular for everybody. These are all made in very good shapes and of fairly good material, have a yoke and a Watteau pleat in the back, some attempt at fit at the side, with straight fronts, and are fastened with cord and buttons. The lining is in different color from the outside, but always of some color that is in good contrast, and a very surprising number of shades there are to choose from. Besides these wrappers, there are a great many dainty negliges in light silks covered with lace; these would be too cool were it not for the very comfortable lining of albatross cloth, at once light and warm. For bed-room wear, the eider-down wrappers bound with ribbon and finished around the waist with cord and tassel are far smarter than wrappers that have cost twice the amount.

A Juvenile Phenomenon.
He can't be got to stop up late. Whatever folks may say: At half-past seven every night He puts his toys away.

He puts his toys away, remark— He doesn't leave them all About the floor where "grown-ups" may Trip over them and fall.

He keeps his collar and his clothes Immaculately clean; He wipes his boots upon the mat When through the mud he's been.

He learns his lessons with a will, And never skips them—no! He never plagues his sisters, and That's why they love him so.

When with his trumpet and his drum He innocently plays, If he is told to "stop that noise," He instantly obeys.

A sullen brow he never wears, He never says, "I shan't!" Nor does he ever cry, "I won't!" Nor does he whine, "I can't!"

He's ne'er been seen to tease the cat, And when his dinner's o'er, He doesn't, as he leaves the room, Contrive to bang the door.

That I can't quite give you his name I am obliged to own, But he is Madame No-one's son, Who lives in Nolandknown.

A Little Hero.
"Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" It was the black kitten that said it. At least, it sounded like the black kitten's voice to the little girl who had started up to listen, in her bed upstairs. She was alone and the house was dark. "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" came the call again, plaintively, as the shivering kitty sat on the window sill, wondering why his little mistress had let that cold night on other nights little Marie had carried him down cellar to his nice bed of shavings by the furnace, and there he had slept, all warm, until morning. He did not know that little Marie had hunted for him upstairs and down, and had gone to bed very unhappy because she feared that he might be suffering somewhere out in the cold. He called again: "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" It may have been only a common meow. It certainly did not sound like any common meow to the black kitten's little mistress. She knew that he was calling her, and reproaching her; and as she heard the wind whistling around the corner of the house, and thought of her darling little cat, shivering outside in the cold, she could stand it no longer. She sprang out of her bed and started down the hall. She soon found that she could not go so rapidly; so carefully waving one hand in front of her, with the other she felt her way along until she came to the stairs. She bravely took the first step, and then stopped short, for up and down the hall window something was waving its long black arms. She turned and went scurrying back to her bed and drew the bed clothes over her head. She lay very still for several minutes; but then there came plainly through the blankets, the call, "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" The little voice was full of reproach now. She thought her kitty knew that she had been a coward, and that she was not going to come to him, even when she knew he was suffering in the cold. He called again, until little Marie could endure it no longer: "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" "I'll just run past the window," she whispered to herself, and once more crept out of bed, and felt her way along the hall. But at the first step she stopped again. She could never, never run past that window, and she stood clinging to the newel post and shivering. But "Marie-e-e! Marie-e-e!" came plaintively up stairs. Marie took another step slowly, clinging close to the banister. Her eyes were fastened on the awful window, as step by step she crept down. When she came opposite it, she was afraid no longer; she laughed softly, for she could see that the "waving arms" were the branches of the apple tree. The rest of the stairs were quickly past, and she felt her way on through the library. Once she stopped and kept hold of the back of a big chair for a long time, for just in front of her the floor creaked loudly. But it was only a little further now; and soon, gathering up all her courage, she went forward. She knew just where to find her kitty, for he always came to the same window when he wanted to come in. She drew up the curtain and there he was. In a moment she raised the window, and he sprang into her arms. She put both paws around her neck, and together they went up stairs. She was not afraid now, for the furry little body that rested so lovingly in the hollow of her shoulder, was a comfort and a protection to her. She could laugh at the waving arms and the creaking floor. Together they cuddled down in the bed, and her kitty sang her a loving song of praise for her courage. Together they fell asleep, and in the morning when Mamma found the little cat's black head close to the sunny curls, and heard the story of his midnight rescue, she wondered that her little girl had not been afraid. "I was awfully afraid, Mamma," said Marie; "but I did it anyhow." "That's what makes heroes," Mamma answered.—Charlotte W. Eastman, in Little Folks.

A Word for the Sparrow.
Why should the English sparrow be considered such a pest? Any one that takes the trouble to study their habits, will see that much that has been said about them is untrue. They are not so quarrelsome as the petted canary; and much less greedy. They are considerate of their fellows, and ready to help them when in trouble. And they are so cheerful and active—always on the alert, no matter how gloomy the day—that a group of the bright-eyed, chattering things is a practical illustration of the beauties of contentment, Sparrows should be protected, not only for the good they do, but for the pleasure they bring even to the slums of great cities, enlivening even the garrets of the sick with their gentle chirrup. They are undoubtedly the scavengers of cities, clearing away waste from every corner, and they have brought soft and loving feelings to the heart of the roughest prisoner, who from his stunted pittance of bread and water will save no small share for the sparrows at his window grating. They are the best of insect destroyers; they have attached themselves to man most confidently; they are beings with flesh and blood and brains, and most affectionate in their own way to those that love and care for them. Therefore let us care for and protect them in summer as well as in winter. For although the farmers may have good reason to object to their presence about their grain stacks, there are many reasons for encouraging them to thrive in our cities.

An Ostrich Policeman.
On a Florida ostrich farm one of the birds acts as watchman. This ostrich, who has been dubbed Napoleon, patrols the camp, giving at intervals a cry which may be said to mean "All's well." If anything alarms him, he at once communicates it to his companions by a series of yells as he advances to the attack. Napoleon stands nearly ten feet high, and weighs upward of four hundred pounds. He is a savage bird, of unusual intelligence. At night he is unusually ferocious, and often his keeper is obliged to stand off. To see the keeper force Napoleon back to his pen in the morning, with a large fork, is one of the sights of the ostrich farm. The enormous bird screeches with rage and strikes out with his feet, but all the while slowly giving way. One night the farm hands were awakened by the roars of Napoleon and the agonizing shrieks of a human being. Rushing to the pens, they saw the ostrich chasing a negro. The negro made an effort to get over the fence, when the bird struck him a glancing blow on the thigh, which ripped it open and exposed the bone. For a time it was thought the poor pheasant thief would bleed to death. The fame of this episode has naturally caused the pheasants' quarters to be shunned by other depredators.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Bearing the Ills They Had.
In the Laccadive Islands in the Indian ocean the food of the natives consists almost wholly of palms and fish. When, therefore, a number of rats took to living in the tops of the trees and eating up the young nuts, black ruin seemed to stare the people in the face. They appealed to the Madras government for help, and a small army of cats was sent to the island. Pussy, however, finding fish plentiful, did not see the fun of climbing up trees seventy feet high for food, and so remained below. Then three snakes were sent to the islanders, who thought the remedy worse than the disease and killed the serpents without delay. But they still complained. So government sent them mongooses, which not only refused to climb the trees but also consumed the natives' fowl. Government next decided to send owls. Here, again, the people objected. In their eyes the birds were "devil birds," that would terrify the babies and set every old wife prophesying evil. The folk accordingly made up their minds to bear the ills they had rather than fly to others they knew not of, and so as soon as they could, packed cats, owls and mongooses into a boat and rowed them to an uninhabited reef, where the creatures were left to their own sweet wills.

The Captive Thrush.
One day a Lochaber lad caught a thrush and took it home. No cage was to be had, so the bird was placed in a basket with a lid. The boy's mother having told the Rev. Dr. Stewart of the capture, the minister—a naturalist well known throughout the Western Highlands of Scotland—came to see the bird. Whilst they were all talking about the prisoner, the lad spied a similar bird on an elder bush, and Dr. Stewart at once noticed that this was the captive's mate. He persuaded the boy to put the basket outside. This was done, and by-and-by the male bird flew down and began caressing the prisoner in many pretty ways. Then he attacked the basket lid furiously hoping to peck a hole in it big enough for his consort to escape by. This he touched the boy's mother and even the boy, that the latter agreed to let the captive free. Taking the basket back to the spot where the thrush had been caught, the lid was opened and the bird flew off with a wild scream of joy, its mate joining it in the wood—both thrushes, no doubt, happier far than kings.
