His interest in public school work is shown by his coming here from Harrisburg without charge to help swell the High school library fund. Now let our people show an equal interest by turning out the full capacity of the hall.

The price has been made so low, not to create the impression of a cheap talk, but to give an opportunity for all to go without sacrifice. Everyone should be there for his own sake, for the sake of the object, and to show that Freeland is not behind other places in interest in school affairs.

Civil War Hero Dead.

Patrick McShea, who served through the civil war in the Twenty-eighth and One Hundred and Forty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, died on Friday at his home in Honey Brook. The deceased had an enviable record as a soldier and was commended on several occasions for bravery by his officers. His most remarkable feat was at the battle of Antietan, where he captured a Confederate flag single-handed and escaped with the trophy from what seemed certain death. He was a prominent Grand Army man. He was aged 59 years and was burled yesterday with military honors.
