A Death-Bed Confession.

The police are sure that they have solved the mystery of the murder of Postmaster Michael Corcoran, of Durwhen the curtain rose for the presentation of Daniel Sully's new drama. "The Parish Priest." Of the play itself little need be said at this time, as it was witnessed by almost every person of town who takes pleasure in seeing a loop did not like the confession of Thomas H. Cooney, of in which he admitted that he was one good play well played, and any praise now bestowed upon it and the people who portrayed the characters would be merely an echo of what has been said by the opera-goers of Freeland and vicinity.

They Married Themselves.

"We are going to marry ourselves," said George Kocher, aged 58 years, as he went into the marriage license clerk's office at Tunkhannock on Tuesday with Ettile Baird, aged 38, and while the officials were wondering how it was to be done, Kocher bought a marriage license for fifty cents, and then said:

"We know of no opposition to one union, and we acknowledge ourselves man and wife." "Yes," said the bride, unblushingly, "we acknowledge ourselves man and wife." Then they went out quietly, after saying that two witnesses were all that were required to make such a marriage legal, and the officials fiscovered it was so. The two saved a fee by marrying themselves.
