Impressive Sermon by Father Fallihee.
At 10.30 o'clock yesterday morning Rev. Hugh L. McMenamin read his first mass in St. Ann's church. He was ordained last week in Baltimore, Md., by Cardinal Gibbons, and arrived at his parents' home in the Second ward on Wednesday evening.
Father McMenamin has been a lifelong resident of St. Ann's parish, and an unusually large number of the congregation assembled at the late mass yesterday to honor the young priest by assisting at his first exercise of the holy office and to receive his blessing.

assisting at his first exercise of the holy office and to receive his blessing.

The solemn and impressive ceremony of a high mass, than which there is nothing in the whole liturgy of the Catholic Church more sacred, was read by Father McMenamin with the strict uniformity that characterizes the mass throughout the world. It is one of the distinctive marks of the universality of the Catholic Church that in all ages and in all countries, from the frozen peaks in all countries, from the frozen peaks of the north to the torrid sands of the south, the holy sacrifice of the mass is, as it has always been, one and the same It is not permitted to the individual clergyman to change or alter one iota of its ceremonies.

In this respect Father McMenamin' In this respect Father McMonamin's first mass was not different from the regular high mass in St. Ann's church every Sunday, and so well did the young clergyman bear himself through the difficult service that a stranger in the church would be unable to tell whether the priest at the altar was performing the holy sacrifice for the first time of relebrating the mass of his sil-

The solemn ceremony, ever impressive, always soothing, epitomizing the life of Christ on earth and renewing the sacrifice of the cross, was made more solemn, if possible, by the extreme fervor of the celebrant and the pious assistance of the vast assemblage, which filled the church to the doors. Father McMenamin sang the different parts of the mass in a strong resonant voice. His movements were characterized by calminess and deliberation, and his bearing throughout the mass was indicative of executional piety.

Father Memamin as a newly-ordalned priest. But there was much to mark him as a pious, learned and able young man, whose place among God's workers will undoubtedly be one of immeasurable usefulness.

Father McMenamin was assisted at the mass by Rev. William O'Donnell, of Scranton, as deacon. Rev. John Jo'Donnell, of Wilkesbarre, a cousin of the celebrant and a fellow theological student, who will be ordained priest next month, acted as sub-deacon. Edward J. Gaffney, of Freeland, was master of ceremonles, while Frank P. O'Donnell, of Drifton, acted as thurfer, and Patrick J. Gallagher, of Freeland, and James Cunningham, of Jeddo, as acolytes.

Rev. M. J. Fallihee, pastor of St. Ann's church, preached the sermon. Father Fallihee's oratory, better known for doctrinal soundness and fatherly wisdom than for rhetorical polish, was laden with much feeling as he referred to the young priest and the difficult work.

wisdom than for rhetorical polish, was laden with much feeling as he referred to the young priest and the difficult work upon which he is about to enter. "The priest's life," the speaker said, "is beset with trials and temptations. This young priest was born in the parish and we claim him as our own. He is all and we claim him as our own. He is all our own, and we must pray for him, as we know that he will pray for us." Father Fallihee's remarks were well adapted to the occasion, and the affectionate manner in which they were delivered made a telling impression on the large congregation.

The uprising in China, and the probable sending of American troops to that country from the Philippines, will likely give some of Freeland's boys a view of the great nation of the East. The striking miners of the Fernwood Colliery.

The striking miners of the Fernwood colliery were led into an alleged riot Friday morning, at Yatesville, near Wilkesbarre, in which over a hundred shots were fired. Two of the strikers were shot. It is claimed they attacked one of the non-union men, and, the armed watchmen at the breaker coming to his assistance, a brief but stubborn battle took place. The watchmen, armed with rifles, stood at the top of an incline and fired at the strikers.

Friday morning about fifty of them as-sembled at a point near the breaker to prevent William Holleran, the head pump runner, from going to work. When Holleran appeared he was sur-rounded. They asked him not to go to work. He tried to push through the crowd, but was held. Then he started towards his home, but as soon as he was clear of the strikers he turned and dashed for the breaker. They followed shouting. Holleran fired at them but hit no one, and then the guards at the mine, hearing the shooting, scrambled shouting. Holleran fired at them but hit no one, and then the guards at the mine, hearing the shooting, scrambled down the culm banks to protect him. The guards had rifles and a volley of ten shots stopped some of the leaders of the crowd.

The rifles brought down two of the strikers in the front rank—Joseph C. Pazzillo, who was knocked senseless by a ball which grazed his head, and Joseph Santo, who fell with a bullet through his leg. Others were frightened into running away, one with a hole in his hat and another through his sleeve.

The fall of the two men and the retreat of some of the others resulted in the strikers drawing off after the fusiliade had lasped a few minutes, and the watchmen then withdrew to the breaker, while the officials at once put extra men on guard and notified Shoriff Harvey of the attack. The sheriff sent several deputies to the scene.
