

He Certniniy Should Succeed in His Line of Business.

Though young, he is tall, good looking and well dressed, the result being, when he walked into one of the largest furniture establishments in the city, he attracted general attention. He announced a desire to look over everything the place could supply for the furnishing of a house from cellar to garret. The probability of a large order struck one of the proprietors, and he departed from custom by taking the young man in hand.

He proved a discriminating judge and a man of good taste. He was quick to detect the best and most stylish, stopping to put down figures and brief but comprehensive descriptions. Two full days were required in showing him all that he wanted to see.

After footing up the cost of all that had met with his approval the youth announced that his next step would be to find a nice little house in a good neighborhood with all modern improvements and at a reasonable rental. The furniture man said that he had just such a place, and it was arranged for them to go in his carriage the next day to see it. Quite a long drive about the best part of the city was taken, in order to put the prospective tenant in his best humor, and then to the cottage.

Here the young man put in four hours, finding the dimensions of all the rooms, heights of ceilings, nature of woodwork, plumbing, sewerage, heathing apparatus, decorations, conveniences of work—everything—much of which would have been overlooked by many an older head. He suggested some changes that were agreed to, and then the landlord drove him to one of the best hotels for dilmer.

Well." inquired the older man after they had caten and were smoking the quarter cigars supplied by him, when do you think you will take the furniture and the house?"

"Haven't the slightest idea. I'm just starting in life. I believe in getting married, and if ever 1 find the right

"Haven't the slightest idea. I'm just starting in life. I believe in getting married, and if ever I find the right girl when I'm ready it will be a go. I've just been finding out in the most practical way what the probable expense will be when the time comes, if it ever does."

Then he wondered why the furniture man swore rapidly and got out of the Lend grooved to slip over the edges of bits of stained glass can be bought and not only makes possible the homemaking of art glass, but introduces amateur glass thickering as a fad. Have you an unsightly window, one with ugly outlook? Buy a lot of the little squares of colored glass. The vitreous varieties and bottle glass come very cheap. Only a couple of simple tools are needed to adjust the squares into the lead strips, to cut the lead as may be needed and to make the necessary perforations. Through these last will pass the wires, cords or ribbons by which the squares are fastened together so that they hang in a long ribbon. Several of these "ribbons" are allowed to fall from a strip of molding that is fastened to the top of the window frame, and, behold, the ugly window is hidden by a glass curtain for the like of which you can give hundreds of dollars. Of course the bought one won't be homemade, and it may be made of glass that is more choice, though for that matter one can get glass as fine as one chooses to pay for.

Care of Palms.

Once every week the surface of the leaves should be worn when this operation is performed, as contact with the hand turns the edges of the leaves yellow. Palms should not be watered from above unless they are immediately wiped off, as each drop of moisture allowed to stand on the leaf causes it to turn yellow. When a room is swept or dusted, the plants should be covered, as the dust will otherwise settle on the leaves and clog the pores, through which the plant breathes. Most palms and ferns do not like gaslight and often when left in an atmosphere charged with it will droop. The windows should be opened and the room well aired turned around each day, so that one side after another is exposed to the light, as the leaves will naturally grow out toward the sunlight.

Stories in Collected Ornaments.

"Have you ever lived with a piece of copper until you have learned to love it?" asked a friend the other day, and she went on to say that she looked upon the softened light playing over the polished surface of a bowl as upon a smile on a well known face, that it was like a bit of continual sunshine to have it in the room. While collecting any aniques is fascinating, it is a strain on the feelings sometimes to realize the pathos of it all—the stories of sorrow, suffering and, maybe, sin, which have brought these beautiful objects from the homes they once adorned to go into strangers' hands. What stories could these fragile bits of glass or china tell—of the strong lives they have outlived, of the happiness of which they were witnesses, changed to bitterness and want, while they, unresponsive, insensible, keep their beauty for allen eyes.

their beauty for allen eyes.

Philadelphia Scrapple.

To make Philadelphia scrapple put one silee of pork and one pound of beef in a kettle and cover with water. The beef need by no means be an expensive cut; what is known to the butcher as a boiling piece is the one usually selected for scrapple. Let it cook slowly for three or four hours, the water never in all that time getting above "smiling point," its surface merely dimpling. When the meat is very tender, take it out and chop it very fine, then return it to the water in the kettle once more. Thicken with a mixture of cornmeal and buckwheat, using one-third of the buckwheat to two-thirds of the cornmeal. Add sait to season. Pour this mixture into a square tin and let it harden overnight. In the morning slice and fry as you would cornmeal mush.

Mrs. Thomas Murphy, of Duryea, is dead. A week ago tonight, while walking along the streets of the town, she tripped over a wire, and in falling fractured a couple of ribs. A physician was summoned and gave her a sleeping powder. Mrs. Murphy went to sleep and died without having regained consciousness. Another physician was called in and said that the other doctor had made a mistake in giving the woman a sleeping potion, as it had caused death. Both sides are now at it hot and heavy, and the coroner will have the remains exhumed to see whether poison caused death or not.
