Fresh Embroyo Makes Old Wheat Grow.

The statement has frequently been made that it is possible to cause grains of wheat found in ancient Egyptian sepulchers to germinate and grow. This statement has been disputed, and the question was discussed at a recent meeting of the French Academy of Sciences, it was shown that while the albumen of wheat found in a tomb 6.000 years old ad undergone no alteration. the embryo was changed and could not be aussed to germinate. But a fresh embryo placed in the ancient albumen yould grow, and this fact, it was said, probably accounted for the statement hat the old Egyptian wheat rescued rom its long entombment would sprout und grow.—Youth's Companion.

HIS FELLOW MAN.

I try to love my fellow man,
I always do the best I can,
I always do the best I can,
I con though he whistles night and noon
Some fiercely execrable tune;
E'en though he be the motorman
Who grins whene'er he halks my plan
To board his swiftly speeding car
Which I had heralded afar;
Though he be one of those who say
Just what the plot is at the play
And taps his foot against my chair
Until he drives me to despair;
Though he be up at early dawn
To shovel snow or mow the lawn,
I love him still. I do my best,
But, oh, it is a fearful test:

Smallest of Wild Cattle.
Celebes has the distinction of being the home of the smallest living representative of the wild cattle, or indeed of the wild cattle of any period of the earth's history, for no equally dimnutive fessil member of the group appears to be known to science. An idea of the extremely diminutive proportions of the anoa, or sapi-utan, as the animal in question is respectively called by the inhabitants of Celebes and the Malays, may be gained when it is stated that its height at the shoulder is only three feet four inches, whereas that of the great Indian wild ox, or gaur, is at least six feet four inches, and may, according to some writers, reach as much as seven feet. In fact, the anoa is really not much, if at all, larger than a well-grown Southdewn sheep, and scarcely exceeds in this respect the little domesticated Bramini cattle shown a few years ago at the Indian exhibition held at Earl's court.

The anoa has many of the characteristics of the large Indian buffalo, but its horns are relatively shorter, less curved, and more upright. In this, as well as in certain other respects, it is more like the young than the adult of the last-named species, and, as young animals frequently show ancestral features which are gradually lost as maturity is approached, it would be a natural supposition that the anoa is a primitive type of buffalo.—London Knowledge.

Massing of Population.

The crowded condition of the more populous sections of large eities we have been accustomed to view with a measure or horror. The density of population in London, Parir, Berlin and other cities of the old world is described in many voluminous trentifies respecting the problems they present. But it is becoming apparent that we are in danger of like conditions in our American centres. I have just seen a chart showing that in New York there is an average of nearly 19 persons to a dwelling. In Hoboken the average is between 12 and 13, in Fall River from 11 to 12, in Jersey City, Chicago and Boston between eight and nine. This chart represents the census 10 years ago, and when one takes into consideration the number of dwellings in which only two or three previous live the average is work.
