"Newspaper English."

It is sweet to hear Professor Lounsbury, the head of the English department at Yale, saying a word in behalf of what some of his more pedantic brethren are pleased to call newspaper English. It is Professor Lounsbury's opinion that while newspaper writing is subject to conditions which tend to impair its excellence, inasmuch as little or no time can be allowed for examination or revision, it is generally marked by greater perspicuity and energy of expression than more labored literary work, and those who write it are as a class far superior to those who set out to be their critics and censors.—Boston Herald.

Father of England's Civil Service.

H. W. Chisholm, who died recently at the age of 93, was the father of the English civil service. He was appointed in 1824 by Lord Grenville to a junior clerkship in the bill department of the exchequer, in which his father was senior clerk before him. The office hours in Mr. Chisholm's early days were 11 to 2, a bright outlook compared with the 10 to 5 through which the civil servant has now to suffer ennul. Mr. Chisholm retired in 1877, after 53 years of service. He was the father of Hugh Chisholm, for some time editor of The St. James Gazette and well known in London journalism.

Noting a suggestion that the British colonies be called kingdoms, the Montreal Herald says: "There is not in the world a more democratic community. In Canada we have neither the appanages of a court nor the survival of a feudal nobility by which to be joined to the past. We have only a growing population of industrious freemen, knowing no castes or classes, and a government that is truly by the people and for the people."

That Fishes—Barying a Snake Alive.

Ramebody has given us his idea that we may know a good deal about men's characters by the sort of hats which they wear and the way they put them on. This is very likely to be true. We might also learn, I dare say, about women's characters if we took note of the bonnets which they select, but I am not going to inquire into these. Again, I am sure you can find out signs of a boy's character if you notice how he arranges his cap on his head and how he treats it too. I have seen a boy kicking his cap no his head and how he treats it too. I have seen a boy kicking his cap along a road as he might a football, which did not make me think highly of him.

Who is a person of method and order? Certainly the man who has a hat which sits squarely on his head, not tilting to the right or the left. Such a man you can trust. Yet there is something to be said for the man whose hat always seems too large for him. He may be a bit careless, perhaps eccentric, yet several great men have worn hats deediedly big. For instance, Mr. Gladstone's hat often seemed inclined to come over his ears. He who tips his hat to one side or the other is apt to be conceited or elsewhales to make himself remarkable. Then it is supposed that those having hats which seem always too small for them are mean or narrow minded. He who usually pulls his hat over his suspicious. Such a person seldom takes a cheerful view of people and things around. But the man who usually has his hat pushed off his face deserves the kindly regard of his friends. Often he is merry, cheerful, ready to come out with snatches of song, though he whose hat leans to be admired. He is eccentric.—Chatterbox.

A Fish That Fishes.

Most remarkable of strange fishes is the angler fish, whose very name seems a paradox. The fishing fish is nevertheless a reality and a stern one to all that approach those awful jaws of his. With a body the color of mud, he generally lies in the shadow of some rock on the bottom of the sea waiting motionless for the approach of his prey. He is provided with an odd kind of fin just over the mouth, and this is held out in front of him to give warning of the coming of something to be swallowed. One taken alive was experimented on, and it was found that if this projecting fin was touched with a stick, even though the stick did not come near the mouth, the jaws closed convulsively. This shows that the fin by some provision of nature closes the jaw as soon as it is touched. The mouth is tremendous, growing to the width of a foot when the whole fish is only three feet long. One of these anglers was caught not long since, and, although it was only 25 inches long, a fish 15 inches long was found sticking in its throat. The angler is provided with peculiar set teeth in double or treble rows along the jaws and at the entrance of the throat. Some of these teeth are a foot long. He is not a pretty fish to look at, but he attends strictly to business and will swarling fin whether it be meant for food or not. All kinds of things have been found in the stomach of anglers from bits of lead and stone to fish almost as large as the angler itself. This is without doubt one of the most peculiar and interesting fish in the whole ocean.

Burying a Snake Alive.

It would not seem a very easy thing to bury a snake alive, but that is what a traveler through western Indian Territory saw some prairie dogs doing. The story is told from Forest and Stream ritory saw some prairie dogs doing. The story is told from Forest and Stream.

The traveler was resting under a tree when he noticed a commotion among some dogs near him. They would run up to a certain spot, peep at something and then scamper back. Looking more closely, he saw 15 to 20 dogs about a rattlesmake, which presently went into one of the dogs' holes.

No sooner had it disappeared than the little fellows began to push in dirt evidently to fill up the hole. By the time they had pretty well covered the entrance the snake stuck his head up through the dirt, and every dog scampered off to a safe distance, all the time barking.

The snake slowly crawled to another hole about a rod distant and went in. This done, they proceeded to beat the earth down, using their noses to pound it with. When it was quite hard, they went away. The traveler examined their work and was surprised to find that they had packed the earth in solid with their noses and had sealed the snake inside.

Circle Games.

There are what are called circle games. In "skip away" the children stand in a circle, holding hands. The player who is "it" runs around the circle and tags one of the players. The one tagged runs in the opposite direction to the player by whom he was tagged, and the player who first reaches the vacant place in the circle wins. "Slap jack" is played the same way, except that when the two who are running meet they must stop and shake hands. "Shake tag in a circle," "drop the handkerchief," "slap catch" and "fox and farmer" are very much alike.

Boys, Improve Your Chances.

Many boys neglect chances of mental improvement. They do not realize what it is to have an education till they get into a company of boys when something comes up for discussion and find that they must sit still instead of taking an active part. After an experience of this sort they usually bemoan their fate and say they had no chance to learn. Some boys leave school sooner than they ought to either from choice or compulsion. It is usually the ones who stop from choice that grumble at fate. When a boy stops going to school from choice, the main cause nearly always lies in his not being industrious or caring what the future has in store for him.—American Boy.
