Prominent Mea In the Countries of Continental Europe.
The international labor bureau open-ed for business in Basel, Switzerland, May 1, in the same country where the central office of the Red Cross society, the international telegraph bureau, the bureau for the regulation of interna-tional freight tariffs, the Latin Mone-tary union and the International Post-al union are in operation. Most of these institutions are the real organs of the associated governments of the world, the Red Cross society and the Postal union embracing all the civi-lized nations of the four quarters of the globe.
The director of the labor bureau is Professor Stephen Bauer of the Uni-versity of Basel, once professor of political economy in the University of Chieago, who has just compiled an ac-count of the origin and purpose of the bureau, from which George Gifford, American consult all Basel, has made a report to this government. It is al-rendy recognized by several govern-ments.
The scheme was first suggested in 1876 by Colonel Emil Frey, a Swiss swiss minister in Washington, and finally as president of the Swiss repub-lle. He suggested that international con-ventions establish uniform conditions of labor in all industrial communities, since the danger resulting from foreign competition is a great obstacle in the way of isolated social reform. But when, five years later, the Swiss na-tional council unanimously voted to be-gin negotiations with other countries for this purpose, the answers were all unfavorable. The idea did not cease to make prog-ress, however. It was a second time recommended in 1888, and in 1890 the German emperor called an internation-al conference at Berlin. Here all the propositions in regard to regulating hours of labor, the work of women and children and Sunday labor were reject-ed by the delegates of the different countries. In 1897 Switzerland again took up the guestion, and the answers, though not so distinctly adverse as on the first oc-casion, were again unfavorable. Only four states gave the scheme some pla-tonic suport. The workingmen, however, did not tonic support. The workingmen, however, did not abandon the idea of an international understanding. The Swiss working-men's society called an International congress at Zurich in September, 1897, to which they invited as guests govern-ment labor officials, factory inspectors and economists, and it was here that the project of an international labor bureau of a semiprivate character took definite form. A congress held soon afterward at Brussels appointed a committee to make proposals for carrying out the plan. To this committee and to the parallel action of a meeting at Ber-lin in 1850 is due the foundation of the International Union For the Legal Pro-tection of Workingmen. This associa-tion is designed to organize the efforts for a solir leform in every country as well as to serve as a financial basis for an international labor office. The committees which pursued this aim-met at the international labor office. The committees which pursued this aim-met at the international labor office. The Swiss national council, on mo-tion of the government council, has voted an annual contribution of 8,000 francs ($1,544) toward the foundation of the International labor office and 1,000 francs to the Swiss section. The other governments are disposed to as-sist the office in a similar way. It will publish first a code of exist-ing labor laws in the English, French and German languages; second, an in-ternation bulletin, and, third, an in-ternational annual of hobr. The international code will contain the texts as well as the motives and the interpretation of the existing legi-lation. The international labor office hopes to enjoy the co-operation of ex-perts of every country for this scien-tific work, who will be appointed as correspondents. The work of transla-tion will be done by the office itself. The bulletin will contain current leg-islative and administrative matter, ex-ific avid couments gencering l strikes and lockouts, a bibliography of official documents geneering labor leg-islaton. The annual will contain the annual report of the association, the proceed-ings of the congress for labor protec-tion and the current supplement of the international code. Governments, industrial and labor or-ganizations, as well as private mem-bers of the association, will receive in-formation concerning texts and no-tives of foreign labor legislation. This branch of the international labor office is already in full activity. The office, in order to fulfill this mission, relies on the liberality of governments, which, by sending their habor laws and fur-nishing information through official au-tiorfiles, can do much to improve the service of information. It is not proposed to aim at a me chanical uniformity of labor legisla-tion, which must adapt itself to dif-ferences of national character and ad-ministration in the various industrial countries. Labor legislation will be profice, first, by finding the most ader quate technical formulation of the regulations concerning certain protee-
