Australian Nicknames.

The inhabitants of New South Wales have long been known as "cornstalks," an allusion to the length and slimmness of the average young New South Wales native. Victorians are known as "gum suckers," with reference to the gum that is found on many native trees, some of which is relished by juveniles. "Crow eaters," as applied to the South Australians, owes its origin to a statement that in times of drought the wheat farmers of South Australia are driven to the source suggested for food. "Wheatfielders" is a more euphonious name sometimes used for the same province.

The Queenslanders are known as "banana landers," that tropical fruit growing there abundantly. Western Australians—or, as they are now generally called, Westralians—are known in the east as "sand gropers" or "gropers." The Westralians themselves group all the other states into "the other side" and call the residents "the other siders."

Tasmania, the green little isle that is much like England in climate and other characteristics, is generally regarded as very quiet and rather behind the times and is referred to as "the land of lots of time," "the land of sleep a lot," and so on, while the inhabitants are called "Tassies," and "Jam eaters," the latter being an allusion to the great fruit production of the "tight little island."—Leisure Hour.

Baring Her Heart.

"Darling," she wrote, "my own darling, I love you, love you, love you! I repeat the words a thousand times a day. Am I forward and unmaidenly, my own beloved, in thus revealing my heart to you? Ah, no! Have you not told me, my precious one, that I am constantly in your thoughts, waking or dreaming? Have you not assured me of your deathless devotion in burning words that thrill me when I think of them, as I do every moment of my life? What are you doing now, darling? Are you counting the leaden hours as they drag themselves along toward the day when we shall be with each other once more? How is it possible, sweet, that you can love me with a millionth part of the fondness I feel for you? Oh, I am yours utterly, utterly! Had I the eloquence of an archangel and all the years of eternity, my own Archibald, I could never express the love that fills my whole being," etc.

Do you think she really was writing to her Archibald?

Not at all, my dear children. She was laying bare her heart's rich treasures for publication in a magazine under the title "Love Letters of a Type-writer Girl."—Chicago Tribune.

Verbs From Proper Names.

To jerry build—To build in an insufficient, careless or hasty manner. Jerry Bros., contractors and builders, were a Liverpool firm in the early part of last century who used to put up rapidly built, showy, but ill constructed houses, so that they gave their name to such work, first in Liverpool, then throughout England.

To levant—To run away, as it were, to the Levant, the eastern portion of the Mediterranean sea, to escape one's creditors. "Never mind that man [having no money to stake], run a levant,"  but be discreet about the man."—Fielding, "Tom Jones."

To lush—The slang word "lush," meaning beer or other intoxicating liquor, is an abbreviation of Lushington, the name of a London brewer. Its adoption in this sense was perhaps facilitated by the fact of Shakespeare having used the old adjective "lush," meaning succulent, rich, luxuriant.

"How lush and lusty the grass looks! How green!"—"The Tempest," II, I.

"They didn't look like regular Lushingtons at all."—Mayhew, "London Labor and London Poor."—Notes and Queries.

He Had Paid For It.

An American had quite an amusing experience recently while on a trip through Switzerland. While standing up in a moving train his foot slipped, and he fell against the window, which caused it to break, without the pieces falling out. The conductor immediately went to him and demanded the usual fine of 3½ francs (70 cents), which was paid, a receipt being given.

A few stations beyond where the accident occurred the crew was changed, but the American went on as far as Basle. When he arrived at this terminus, he waited until most of the people had left the car and then he threw his dress suit case with all his force through the broken window. He was at once surrounded by the station master, his assistants and everybody of authority within the station, but as he claimed not to understand them there was much gesticulation and talk until, just as the American was about to be arrested, an interpreter was found, to whom he showed his receipt, to the astonishment of the authorities and the amusement of the bystanders.

The First British Census.

It is significant of the invariable opposition offered to any innovation in England that when the first proposal for a census was made in parliament it met with bitter hostility. It was on March 30, 1753, that Mr. Poffey, M. P., asked leave to bring in a bill "for the taking and registering an annual account of the total number of people and of the total number of births, deaths and marriages." The ex-horse secretary's grandfather, Mr. Matthew Ridley, said that the people of Newcastle regarded the measure as ominous and feared—having regard, perhaps, to the punishments awarded to King David—lest some public misfortune or an epidemical distemper should follow the numbering. However, the bill passed the commons and received the support of the government, but was thrown out by the lords.—London Chronicle.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

Little Princess and the Teacup.

When she was a little girl, a very pretty story was told of Queen Wilhelmina of Holland. Her father was presented by the city of Amsterdam with a beautiful set of cups and saucers. So highly did he prize them that he at once issued orders that any one in the palace who should be so unfortunate as to break one should be dismissed.

Not long after this order little Wilhelmina was surprised to discover her favorite footman weeping bitterly. It seemed that he had been so unfortunate as to break one of the cups in carrying it from the room in which he had been serving tea.

The princess was deeply grieved at the accident; but, having discovered that the pieces were quite large and could easily be glued together, she said to the footman:

"If you will do exactly as I direct, I will try to help you out of your trouble. You can easily glue these pieces together. This afternoon when you are serving tea bring this cup to me filled with cold tea, and I will see what I can do about it."

The footman obeyed his directions exactly. A moment after the princess had received her tea she managed to let it fall so that it broke into thousands of pieces. The king was furiously angry.

"Goodby, father!" cried Wilhelmina, her arms about his neck. "I'm going. You said whoever broke a cup should be banished." Of course the father forgave her, and some little time afterward she confessed the whole affair, only she would never reveal which of the footmen had been the guilty culprit.

Youngest Kentucky Colonel.

This is a picture of the youngest Kentucky colonel. He is Austin Nelson Edwards, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson J. Edwards of Newport, Ky. Little Colonel Edwards was born Jan. 3, COLONEL EDWARDS.

1898, so you see he is only a little over 3 years old, quite young to bear so proud a title. However, he bears his honors handsomely. He was appointed colonel by Governor W. S. Taylor of Kentucky.

Luck Comes to the Bellboy.

"Luck," said a man who believes in it, "comes to different people in different ways. I know a man who is now about as well fixed as most men would want to be whose luck came to him in helping a man on with an overcoat."

"He was a bellboy then in a hotel, and one day a big man, who was big and prosperous financially as well as physically, and who had just got his overcoat out of the coatroom, turned to him and said:

"Here, boy, help me on with this coat," at the same time tossing the big coat over to him and turning away. The boy didn't begin to be big enough to do it, and, asking him to be just the big man's little joke, for he was a good natured man, but the next minute the big man felt the coat going up to his shoulders all right. Turning round, he saw the youngster stepping down from a chair which had been standing near and which he had grabbed on to the minute the man turned his back.

"This tickled the big man very much, and he took the small boy into his office, and practically the boy's fortune was made from that minute, for he had the stuff in him to make good as well as the brains to meet his luck half way when it came."

"He'll Do."

"He'll do," said a gentleman decisively, speaking of an office boy who had been in his employ but a single day.

"What makes you think so?"

"Because he gives himself up so entirely to the task in hand. I watched him while he swept the office, and although a procession with three or four brass bands in it went by the office while he was at work he paid no attention to it, but swept on as if the sweeping of that room was the only thing of any consequence on this earth at that time. Then I set him to addressing some envelopes, and although there were a lot of picture papers and other papers on the desk at which he sat he paid no attention at all to them, but kept right on addressing those envelopes until the last one of them was done. He'll do, because he is thorough and dead in earnest about everything."

You may be naturally a very smart person, you may be so gifted that you can do almost anything, but all that you do will lack perfection if you do not do it with all of your heart and strength.

What Troubled Johnny.

"Mamma," said small Johnny, "I'm awful sorry I took the preserves out of the jar when you wasn't looking."

"So your conscience is troubling you, is it?" queried his mother.

"I guess so," replied Johnny, "but I thought all the time it was my stomach."

A bill which has just become a law of New York makes the funeral expenses of a deceased person payable from his estate before any other debts. Besides being a boon to undertakers, this measure may have some effect in encouraging reasonable simplicity of funeral display.

An old horn snuffbox once belonging to Sir Francis Drake, possibly the one which he used at Plymouth Hoe during his famous game of bowls, has just been sold for £3 10s. in London. The snuffbox is a quaint old relic, bearing the coat of arms of Sir Francis, with his name on the lid.

The Indian Territory, which increased in population from 180,000 in 1880 to 391,000 in 1900, is an aspirant for the same territorial representation in congress as is now given to its neighbor, Oklahoma, formerly a part of it. The white population of the Indian Territory is largely increasing.
