Rabbits Perish From Cold In Local District

Reports are being received by County Game Protector Harry Meiss that many of the rabbits sent to this county by the game commission from Kansas, and liberated on the nearby mountains have died from the cold.

Two dozen animals were liberated in the Nescopeck mountain district by F. G. Roth and M. S. Kemmerer, near the latter's farm at Nescopeck Pass several weeks ago. A trip through the woods yesterday revealed a dozen of more of them frozen to death, while others were so numb from the cold they were hardly able to move.

Game Protector Meiss reported that this is the only season of the year that rabbits can be procured. He says it is also impossible to keep them cooped after their arrival as this experiment was also tried. A consignment of them was placed in a barn but they fought each other so ferociously that all but one were killed.

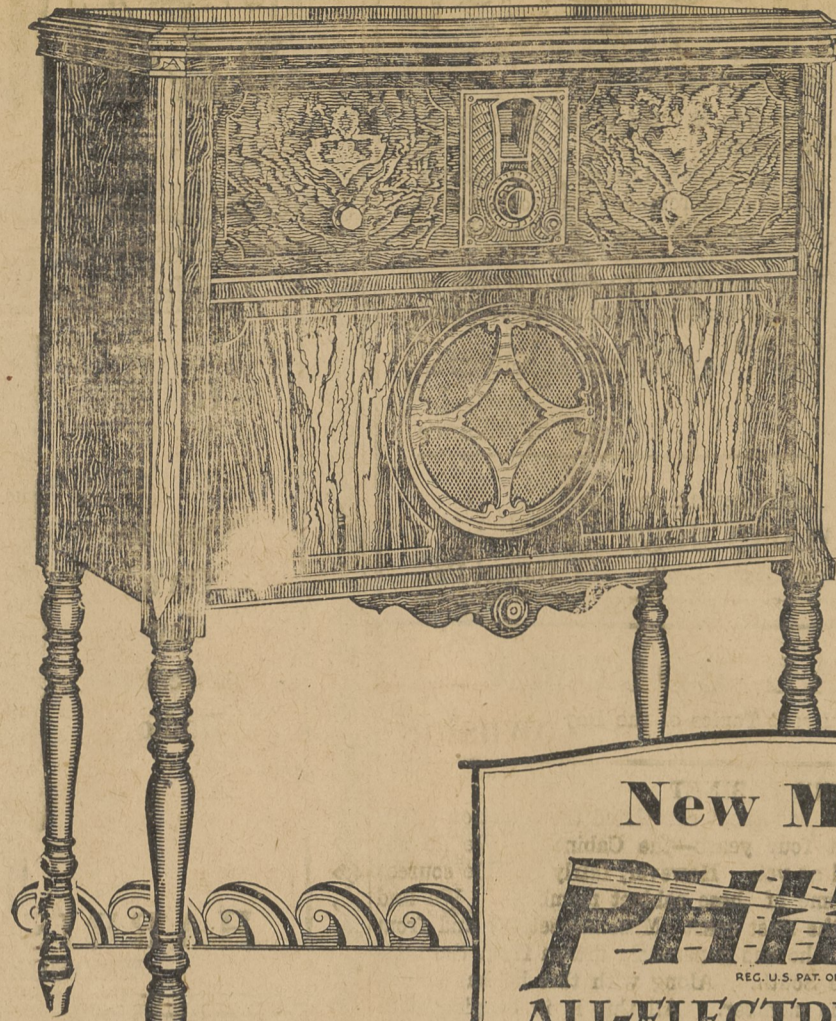

An effort is now to be made to attempt to secure rabbits from colder districts. The chief obstacle is the shipment conditions. In crates and boxes and warmed by artificial heat the rabbits are so softened, sportsmen say, that they cannot stand the severe conditions of snow covered Pennsylvania mountains.

Makes Report On Rural District Electrification

A report of the Pennsylvania Joint Committee on Rural Electrification to the Public Service Commission, made public yesterday said that an agreement has been reached between representatives of farmers and the electric companies whereby extensions of rural lines will be made upon furnishing of a monthly guarantee by the prospective consumers.

CAPTAIN HULL ASKS YOU TO HELP SAVE "OLD IRONSIDES"

Captain Isaac Hull, commanded the Constitution, when on August 19, 1812, she defeated H. M. S. Guerriere, her most famous victory. In the heat of this engagement an American seaman, noticing a British shot strike the side of the Constitution and fall into the sea, shouted, "HUSSA, her sides are made of iron!" Thus our ship gained her sobriquet "OLD IRONSIDES"
