Fine Farmers For Low Grade Milk

Harrisburg, Nov. 29.—Farmers who deliver to milk receiving stations or milk dealers, watered milk or a product otherwise below the legal requirements, are being prosecuted in Pennsylvania.

Recently the Bureau of Foods and Chemistry, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, has received a number of complaints regarding low quality milk. Upon investigation, the bureau found the source of the trouble in some instances to be the farmer who delivered milk deficient in butterfat and solids.

"Farmers are not exempt from the law governing the standard of milk sold any more than the distributor or dealer," the bureau explains. "Where there is any question about the quality of the milk, producers should have tests made for their own satisfaction and protection. The delivery of a low quality product, whether watered or deficient in fat, because of inefficient cows, cannot be overlooked in the rigid enforcement of Pennsylvania food laws."

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders From the Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Keep Apples Cool—Apples keep best in a cool, moist, well-ventilated storage. While it is difficult to secure optimum temperature without artificial refrigeration, opening the storage doors in the evening and closing them in the daytime will help lower the temperature.

Order Chicks Carefully—Before placing orders for chicks, consider the size of egg, shell texture and freedom from tint of eggs produced by the stock from which the chicks are hatched. Also take into account size of bird, freedom from disease, standard type and time required to reach maturity.

Blood Tells in Dairying—Cows are good or poor producers according to their blood inheritance. Do not waste time raising heifer calves unless from good, high producing cows and from a sire that also is from high producing stock.

Grow Plants in Houses—Sash greenhouses are being substituted more and more for the old-fashioned hotbed in growing early plants. Better control of conditions is possible in the greenhouse and it offers a good place to work in any kind of weather.

Attend Poultry Course—Penn State's poultry short course, December 2 to 6, will give those who attend the latest information on poultry houses, management, diseases and nutrition. Poultrymen are invited to attend.

Vegetables to Win Prizes—More than $200 in premiums will be awarded to exhibitors of vegetables at the State Farm Products Show in Harrisburg next January. Lay aside your best specimens now.

Start Pruning Early—If there is much pruning to be done, it is advisable to start in the fall and early winter on apples.
