Start Work On Clay Products Plant At Noxen

Engineer Completes Work—Plan To Erect Large Warehouse and Install Machinery at Once

Within a week drillers will be at work on the tract of land at Noxen, recently purchased by outside capitalists for development as a clay products plant.

The land on which the deposits of Fuller's Earth have been found is located in Hettis Hollow on Schooley mountain, about four-tenths of a mile from the Bowman's Creek branch of the Lehigh Valley railroad.

Machinery has already been ordered for the plant and its cost will run in the neighborhood of fifty to sixty thousand dollars.

Since the plant will be one of the most modern of its kind in the country and most of the work will be done by machinery, it is not likely that more than twenty-five or thirty men will be employed in the work of taking out the Fuller's Earth and preparing it for shipment.

Young Craftsman Made Foreman of Post's Printshop

Russell Weaver, Expert Typographer, of Bourbon, Indiana, Joins Staff of Local Industry

Russell F. Weaver, young typographer and lay-out design expert of Bourbon, Indiana, this week joins the staff of the Dallas Post as foreman in charge of the mechanical department.

The selection of Mr. Weaver to take complete charge of the mechanical activities of The Dallas Post is in keeping with the policy of the Post owners to establish a first class newspaper and high class printing industry in Dallas.

A graduate of Indiana State Teachers' College and a young man of high character, Mr. Weaver is keenly interested in boys' work and has had considerable experience in Scouting and the organization of boys' clubs.

To assist Mr. Weaver in his work, The Post printshop this week received a complete series of the latest Bernhard Gothic type which is the latest innovation turned out by The American Type Founders of Philadelphia.

There was a time when the job printing turned out by the Post printshop did not reach the ideals set by the Post owners. This time is now past and the Post printshop has reached the point where its work and craftsmanship is equalled by no similar sized shop in Luzerne county.

Few Know How Close Nation Was To Crisis

President Hoover Tells Stockbridge How Panic Was Averted in Exclusive Interview Held At White House

Washington, D. C., Apr. 25—(Auto-caster) I have written in these impressions, gathered during conversations with President Hoover, of the President's engineering mind, the mind which demands facts and all the facts as the basis for governmental action.

No better illustration of the effectiveness of this method can be found than the checking of the business crisis, which was precipitated last Fall by the speculative crash on the Stock Exchange.

Everything was set for a business depression which, in the usual course of such things, would carry the hardship of unemployment of millions for two years or more, as it did in 1920-21. As I write this the crisis is passed. Business is definitely on the upswing, both public and private accounts are under way, bank credits are easier, money is beginning to pass freely again from hand to hand, men are going back to their jobs in six months of the major part of the panic is over.

It is over because President Hoover called the business and industrial called the business and industrial and demanded that they tell the facts about the situation in their respective industries.

Nothing of the sort had even been done before. In previous times of economic disturbance the public has been left to guess at the facts, and it has always guessed them as worse than they were. That's why it has taken so long, in the past, for recovery to set in. The patient wouldn't believe that he was getting well.

This time the facts were actually worse than the public imagined they were. But bringing the facts to light and assembling them, including with the facts of what had already happened, the facts about what was going to happen in the near future, had precisely the effect which President Hoover had anticipated and hoped for, the restoration of public confidence and the dispelling of "panic" talk.

If I were called upon to list the outstanding achievements of Mr. Hoover's first year in office, I think I would put this first, although I gathered the impression that the President himself regards the success of his efforts at better international relations, including the Naval Armament Reduction Conference, as of even greater importance.

In passing let me interject here the fact that Mr. Hoover never had the slightest doubt about the outcome of the London naval conference. He expected a three-power agreement, between Great Britain, Japan and the United States, and anticipated that the difference between Italy and France might prevent those nations from joining at this time to make it a five-power pact.

It is revealing no secret now to say that the situation as it existed in the beginning of November, 1929, was far more serious than the public dreamed of. Employment had been decreasing for several months, industry was slowing down, production was falling off.

It is revealing no secret now to say that the situation as it existed in the beginning of November, 1929, was far more serious than the public dreamed of.

The response when the President called the business and industrial leaders into conference was complete. These men had done business with Mr. Hoover before. In his long service as Secretary of Commerce he had demonstrated the truth of his belief that any controversy can be settled, if all of the persons interested are got together in one room and have brought out and discussed. Conferences with business leaders were no novelty to him. He knew them and they knew him and believed in him. That made his task in this instance easier, though none the less important.

He knew who the "key men" were, and they were the ones he called together in Washington. He asked them to undertake new programs of construction work and they promised them to him. When they had all been assembled they tallied the largest amount of money to be spent for labor, materials and supplies that American business had ever spent in the course of a year.

It did not make much difference then what had happened in the past. The assurance that these things were going to happen in the future, that these promises had been made to the President, was sufficient to stem the tide of panic and restore public confidence.

The electric light and power, gas and street railways promised to spend $1,400,000,000 for new construction.
