record. A good many other parents have hailed the tree-sitting contest as a sure way of knowing where the boys are during their vacation time.

Fad Spreads Rapidly From the Mississippi Valley the tree-sitting craze spread East and West. As this is written Bill Kearny of Kansas City claims a longer record than that of Jack Richards. The late entrants do not expect to win the championship, but many of them are shrewd enough to capitalize the craze.

There is John Norwood, a colored boy at Pensauken, N. J., who lives in a barrel up in a tree and shines the shoes of the people who come to see him, pulling them up on a string and charging a shine for axxx xzx and charging a dime for a shine. A firemen's carnival at Audubon, N. J., seized upon a tree-sitting fad as an added attraction and promised three boys $100 if they would stay in a tree on the fair grounds for ten days. One New Jersey grocer is paying two boys 25 cents a day each to sit in a tree opposite his store, figuring that they drew customers to his part of town.

Everything is not rosy in a tree-sitter's life. Martin de Bree of North Tarrytown, N. Y., got in only eleven hours before the mosquitoes drove him from his perch. In many cities the rude and unsympathetic police have interfered with tree-sitters in the public parks. But the boys have been getting a barrel of fun out of it, and after all that's what vacation is for.
