ANTI-MASONIC PROPAGANDA SHOWN IN EARLY PAPERS

Recently subscribers to THE POST have sent the editor many old copies of Pennsylvania newspapers as well as old copies of THE DALLAS POST. THE POST, although established forty years, is relatively a youngster as compared with these older newspapers. The following news article taken from the American Press sheds some interesting light on early journalists and early Pennsylvania newspapers:

To the newspaper man of today one of the most curious and interesting discoveries in examining the early newspapers of the United States is the volume and the bitterness of the public discussion of Freemasonry in their

It has been impossible to check accurately the number of newspapers which were founded for the avowed purpose of attacking the Masonic order, but there must have been fifty or more. Between 1810 and 1835 or so, Freemasonry was as live an issue in American politics as Prohibition is today, and the press was even more outspoken on the subject.

By their opponents the Masons were accused of every crime in the calendar from plotting treason against the young republic to the murder of traitors within their own organization. Diphtheria Clinics Final Payment Numerous books and pamphlets purporting to expose the secrets of Free-masonry were advertised.

The anti-Masonic agitation reached its climax in 1826, when the direct accusation was made against the mem
