DO HOME FIRES STILL BURN?

By Mary Skopic

Do home fires still burn? Of course they do in true American homes. I am thinking of a family that is ideal. How happy they are. God has a place in that home which is not true of every home.

It will not take long to describe this, but the reader can readily read between the lines. The father is kind to every member of his family. The mother has patience, which many people lack.

They start their day with morning worship. The members of the family going forth for the day are thus put in God's care. What a vast difference that makes.

After breakfast the parents and children go about their tasks for the day. The mother attends her household duties. She does not forget that home cooking makes a more pleasant home and goes about her task with a song. Then other household duties, such as cleaning and tending flowers begins.

Her table at meal time is a source of delight. Things are fixed to tempt one's appetite. From soup to dessert everything is a delight.

Does the father grumble? No! He always commends the mother on the preparation of her meals.

The mother also finds time for dress-making and does not neglect the husband's and son's wardrobes.

Her social activities, of which there are many, also find a place in her life. People enjoy her company. She finds time to learn readings for others pleasure; to visit the sick, and comfort those who are in sorrow. She is an ideal wife, mother and friend.

The husband lives for his family. He helps his wife and acts as a guide and companion for his sons. People who know him say, "He practices what he preaches." He also comforts those who are sick and on no account misses his church meetings at any time.

When the day's work is over they all sit together at the fireside, providing no social duty calls. Often times a book is read aloud, due to the fact that father cannot tax the strength of his eyes. These are of the best. Often times they are religious; often times historical, and often times they are romantic.

This family life is ideal. Nowhere can you find a more happy family. Although the father's salary does not permit them every thing they want, they are contented.

They do not need "thrills" or "millions." Yet they are happier in their humble home with flowers blooming in the yard about a small garden than people who have everything their hearts desire as far as money goes, but lack love and happiness.

GENTLEMEN'S ETIQUETTE

Doris Fritz, Sophomore

In the movies or on the street you see them walking, they never speak.

They stand in front of you and ask for that

Not even apologizing when they knock off your hat.

When in the restaurant we go "This table here," is what they say and yell out, "Oh! Hello,"

There goes Miss So-and-So

I saw you at the five and ten today.

The waiter asks us for the order; We tell him we want pie

They say, "Oh! That's a quarter, It's most expensively too high.

When we stroll along the avenue On the right hand side they walk They point out, "See those two,"

You should hear their talk. Their language, it is terrible

Their manners quite the same Although you may think these horrible,

Still boys cannot be blamed.

COOLIDGE WORDS $2 EACH

For writing six short editorials a week, Calvin Coolidge receives $2 a word. His contract calls for not less than 150 words nor more than 200 words daily. He manages to make an average of 195 words. Which shows Mr. Coolidge practices what he preached when President—thrift and economy. Mr. Coolidge is a man of few words, but $2 a word is $2
