GIVES WARNING ABOUT CUTTING EVERGREENS

"Scotch" Santa Clauses, who cut their Christmas trees from the State forests or from privately owned land without the owner's consent, will do well to be more careful this year, said John W. Keller, Deputy Secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Forests and Waters. Cutting Christmas trees without permission is theft, and the penalty provided by law for such illegal cutting is $25 for each tree removed.

One-half million evergreens are cut each year from the hillsides of Pennsylvania and marketed for Christmas decorations. These locally cut trees retail from 25 cents to $2.50 each. As a result of the quick turnover and high percentage of profit to be made from the sale of Christmas trees, cutting evergreens from privately owned land without the consent of the owner has in several sections reached the status of an "easy money racket."

A number of truckers of Christmas trees found out to their financial embarrassment that the State Legislature passed such a law in 1927. Many land owners are on watch these crisp December evenings to detect self-appointed Santa Clauses, operating trucks instead of sleighs, to prevent them from getting away with valuable loads of stolen evergreens.

Forest rangers also have been instructed to be on the alert for violators of the law protecting trees and shrubs growing in the State forests.
