Nature Notes

Contributions to this column by local sportsmen and nature lovers will be appreciated by the editor. Last week we jotted down a few notes on wild life and before we knew it had a column. The response from many of our sub-scribers who read it prompts us to continue. We will deeply appreciate any observations which readers may have of wild life in this vicinity.

BOB WHITE

In recent years there have been noticeable increases in the number of Bob White or Quail in this vicinity. Thse birds wintered well last season and almost any afternoon their cheerful whistling can be heard by residents of the upper end of Lake street. At least one flock has its headquarters along Centre Hill road in the vicinity of Warden Cemetery. Often the flight. In Susquehanna county this regular petitions are being signed to have the regular regu year petitions are being signed to have

STARLINGS And speaking of birds, have you noticed the flocks of Starlings as they fly across the early evening sky coming from the vicinity of College Misericordia to roost in trees near Huntsville reservoir. As high as ten flocks follow this route early every summer evening. There are possibly a hundred or two hundred birds in each flock. The Starling is a relative new comer to America but it apparently does well here and has made many vania, representative of the Valentine duce at present. vania, representative of the Valentine Paint company, has his summer home on a mountainside just below Lute's Corners in Wyoming county. He has recently been doing considerable repairing to the buildings, shingle siding the house. The porcupines in that section either don't like on like the siding where the porcupines have feasted during the night. But shingles imagine a herd of "pinto" deer! aren't the only things that porcupines like to eat. A friend of ours recently reports seeing a grouse making darts at something on the ground near the end of a log. Upon examination he found a porcupine eating the grouse eggs from a nest under the log. PLENTY OF RABBITS

An early evening automobile ride from Dallas out past Clifford Spaces farm and then to the right up the hill to the old Whipp farm will con-vince even the most skeptical that wild life abounds near the shores of Huntsville reservoir. A few evenings ago we counted five rabbits sitting in the road in a space of not more than twenty yards.

ALBINO DEER

Few woodsmen or sportsmen in this region excel Oscar Terry of Evans' Falls in the number and variety of kills made. One of his most interest-ing trophies is the albino deer which is mounted and stands in the window of the store at Viola Park, Evans'

Most Indian tribes used to have interesting superstitions about albino, or "white," deer, and even yet most hun-ters are proud if they happen to kill

But however interesting because they are in reality just "freaks," in the very worst sense of the word, and a threat to the herd. White deer, white mink, white robins, white crows, "white blackbirds," — with each and all of them Nature has simply "slipped a cog" and they are not healthy in the full sense of the term.

Unfortunately, albino deer are rather frequently reported in the Pennsylvania herd, and as a consequence we repeatedly hear of a spotted deer, or "pinto," as they would be called in

Flies Are Popular

As Lures For Bass

Fly fishing for black bass bids fair o rival fishing with the tiny feathered lures for trout in Pennsylvania's waters, Oliver M. Deibler, fish comnissioner, said today. Anglers in many sections of the State are finding in fly casting for gamy black bass a sport of thrills. Taken on a light fly rod, a bass weighing half a pound is capable of furnishing action in abunlance for the fisherman.

Use of the feathered lures, equipped with small spinners, is of definite dvantage, not only to the angler but o the bass. Undersize bass, when aken, are rarely hooked deeply enough to be severely injured. From the angler's angle, the difficulty attendant to eeping live bait and carrying a min now bucket while fishing is removed.
