The Heritage American Room
No. 5-New Upholstery

Nothing succeeds like new upholstery in changing the appearance of the old furniture. This shows the changes made in the sofa and rocker by new coverings.
UPHOLSTERING can certainly cover a multitude of sins. Nothing succeeds like new upholstery when it's a question of modernizing old furniture. Often chairs or sofas which seem beyond hope can be completely transformed into charming pieces by smart new coverings which will frequently overcome defects in proportion and line.
Our old room, you will remember, was dominated by dark overstuffed balloon-like sofa, a comfortable but bulging armchair, upholstered in the same monotonous dark taupe cut-plush, formed a drab spot nearby.
Our first reupholstering move, then, is to recover the sofa with a smartly tailored rep fabric in a soft blue-green which softens the sofa's line and gives it a trim and smart appearance. Two pillows in terra cotta were used as colorful accents on the sofa. Then we took twenty years off the age of the chair by recovering it with a colorful figured glazed chintz of the same material as the over-draperies. Pleated valances, added to the bases of both chair and sofa, served the double purpose of hiding the ungainly base and bringing the furniture down toward the floor, giving an air of greater stability and repose.
Next comes the rejuvenation of the low-arm rocker, a piece so popular in many homes. A figured cushion with a saucy ruffled skirt is added to the seat of the chair and a pad is tied, Colonial fashion, to its back. The material used for both pad and cushion is a glazed chintz in small figures of light terra cotta and ivory on a terra cotta ground.

In many homes an old patent rocker offers a problem all its own. Everyone likes the comfortable tilt but no one cares for its antiquated appearance. An effective method of treating this piece is to wedge the rocking base at the angle you prefer and then put a valance around the lower part of the chair to hide the base. Add a smart upholstering to the rocker's back and seat and you have a chair as comfortable as ever and really good looking.
In our Heritage American room pads are also placed on seats and backs of the small chairs in the room, providing bright spots of color as well as an opportunity to hide some outmoded gingerbread spindles and carvings in the design of the chair backs.
Before we can proceed with the grouping of our redressed furniture we must consider certain bad architectural features that are common to most of the older houses. Our next article will show how to overcome them.
