Fashions Reflect Optimistic Hopes

World-Renowned Designers Strike Cheerful Note With Styles

Fabrics—Silk, synthetic and wool are more luxurious this season than they have been for many years and indicate most decidedly a more cheerful tone of expectant better times, perhaps that prosperity, we have heard so much about, is in fact "just around the corner" this time.

Velvet—plain, novelty and particularly the new non-crushable type—is far out in the lead of popularity. I know of no creative house of importance that does not show more velvet than ever before. Both Chanel and Bouslogue are velvet minded. Bouslogue having created the crushed type so much the vogue, but this year they have outdone themselves in the use of this regal fabric.

Gorgeous Brocades and metals have won favor in the more elaborate evening gown and formal afternoon dress field, such authorities as Chanel, Lelong, Patou, Rouff, Worth, Bouslogue, Molyneux and Paray show them in creations that leave nothing in the way of luxury to be desired.

Crepes and satins retain their popularity for the more reserved and practical formal dress. They are finished for the most part with dull or pebbly surfaces that lend themselves nicely to a great variety of contrasting trim.

Woolens are also of the rough variety—hairy surfaces, nubs and bouclets are used in the smartest models for general day time wear and sport dresses. Broadcloth is used by Chanel, Worth, Patou, and Rouff but confined by them to models designed for late afternoon wear.

Summarizing the fabric field, the representative wardrobe this Fall season should have at least one velvet evening gown, a day time dress of rough wool and one using metal cloth in blouse or tunic with a skirt of Velvet or Broadcloth.
