Ethiopian Heat, Drought Almost Defeated Marines After Treaty

By LOREN T. CASEY

Picture a group of American naval men traveling across the Abyssinian deserts in 1903. Their supplies and equipment are loaded on camels and mules. The men themselves are mounted. They are en route to the then mysterious capital of Ethiopia at Addis Ababa to interview no less a personage than King Menelik himself.

This strange pilgrimage was inspired by President Theodore Roosevelt, who was anxious to get a treaty signed by the Ethiopian monarch. It was the only time so far as the records show that armed men of our nation ever penetrated into the heart of Abyssinia. Their mission was entirely one of peace and friendship.

Official reports of this expedition read like fiction. They tell of threats from savage tribes; hordes of monkeys scrambling in mad haste at the appearance of the travelers; nights of ceaseless vigil in the African wilds, and forced marches after sundown to avoid the terrific heat of the lowlands.

There was a scarcity of water. Once an open rebellion on the part of the native camel drivers threatened to halt the progress of the party. But eventually the group reached the capital after three weeks of trekking over the primitive and sometimes hostile country.

Twenty-six Americans took part in the expedition. They were Robert P. Skinner, U. S. Commissioner, Lieutenant C. L. Hussey, of the Navy; Captain G. C. Thorpe, of the Marine Corps, eighteen enlisted marines and five bluejackets.

The rest of the party was composed of Arabs, Abyssinians, and native camel drivers of the Dankali tribe, reputed to be the most savage and rebellious people of Ethiopia. Incidentally, two of the camel leaders were women.

At that time Abyssinia's only railway stretched about 150 miles inland from the seaport at Jibuti to Direddawa. At this point the oddly-assorted group was mobilized and the approximately 350-mile journey to the capital began. The Dankalis created trouble right from the start. After the second day's trek they refused point blank to go any farther unless they chose their own route. Their leader was trussed with a rope and told he would be dragged along the chosen route if he did not go voluntarily. This, together with the fact that his followers were confronted with the muzzles of the marines' loaded and aimed rifles, made him change his mind.

At another point the party was threatened by the King of the Dankalis, who demanded a sum equal to about fifty dollars. Again there was a demonstration by the sea soldiers, and the king and his followers withdrew. The trail followed was part mountainous and part desert. Camp sites were prepared after the fashion of covered-wagon days. Men and supplies occupied the inner circle, with a row of camels and mules at its outer rim.

Perhaps their greatest difficulty was the securing of an adequate water supply, of which there was a great shortage. They were required to boil all drinking water, but even muddy and tainted water was scarce. Once they broke camp at midnight in order to reach a water supply at their next camp. On three occasions they chose camp sites where there was no water except that which they carried.

The country was then infested, and still is according to late reports, with every animal known to the African jungle. There were elephants, lions, leopards, hordes of monkeys and baboons. Hyenas made the nights hideous with their weird laughter. Guards were always placed around the camp sites to prevent the slaughter of the pack animals.

A strange mixture of hostility and friendship was encountered by the group. The tribes remote from Menelik's rule proved troublesome, but those near the capital proved more friendly and extended every hospitality to the strangers. Long lines of natives, bringing supplies of food, often invaded the camp to make their gifts in the name of the king.

As they approached the capital an astounding sight greeted the travelers. All of the naval men had shifted into dress uniforms and were prepared to meet Menelik in style. But their coming had long been awaited in Addis Ababa.

Hills and plains were covered with thousands of warriors and chiefs, fantastically dressed in lion or leopard skins, some of them decorated with lions' manes or ostrich feathers. Each warrior carried a rhinoceros hide shield, a spear and a rifle. Some of them were mounted on splendid Arab horses or zebra-like mules, many of them richly caparisoned.

There was no military precision to their lines or to the manner in which they carried their weapons, but chiefs, carrying long slender sticks, would walk along the lines checking a too eager warrior back into his place.

With a fanfare of trumpets and the beating of tom-toms the officers and marines rode forward to be ushered into the presence of the king. Somewhere a crude native band struck up the Star-Spangled Banner. The king, sitting on his feet and nearly buried in cushions received them.

Menelik greeted the diplomatic party cordially, and the inhabitants were friendly and hospitable during the ten days the visitors remained there. The treaty was signed, and presents of lion cubs and ivory were received as a gift for the American President. Menelik even had special medals made for the party, inscribed with the words: "Lion among lions, king among kings!"

The return journey was made without any unusual incident and in two days' less time than the twenty-one days it had required to reach Addis Ababa. The Americans rejoined their ship, the Machias, ending one of the oddest expeditions ever made in the history of American diplomacy.

source—Ex-President Herbert Hoover. While Mr. Hoover is publicly and politically viewing with alarm, privately he is getting in on the ground floor. According to John E. Pickett, editor of the Pacific Rural Press, Mr. Hoover and his son, Allan, are among the largest investors in farm land. "The smart money men feel," Pickett says, "that farm land is the soundest investment of all, and they are encouraged by the fact that agriculture has made the best recovery of any major industry and has a cheerful outlook ahead."

When he wrote for the Chicago Tribune, Floyd Gibbons, who writes a weekly column for The Post, received $25,000 annually. . . . He lost his eye while serving as a war correspondent during the World War. . . . Six people claim to have the identical hat Gibbons was wearing when the bullet tore through the brain and took out his eye. . . . He is in Ethiopia now. . . . So many of the correspondents in Addis Ababa left their homes in a hurry they had no formal outfits to wear at the Emperor's State dinner last week. . . . So, because he wanted the newspapermen to see how cultured and stately the Abyssinian court is, Haile Selassie broke precedent by allowing the correspondents to attend in street clothes. . . . The consensus of expert opinion is that if Italy fails to conquer and pacify Ethiopia by the beginning of the rainy season, next February, she will need at least four years for the job. . . . They base their opinion on France's twenty-year job in pacifying the Rif in Morocco. . . . Military men expect Italy to capture borderland camps and Ethiopia's only railroad within a few weeks. . . . Addis Ababa may fall early, too, they think. . . . But the real trouble will come in pacifying the natives. . . . especially if Italy has to call some of the troops back home because of trouble in Europe. . . . In the rainy season in Ethiopia people and animals bog down in the deep mud so most people stay in the house until the sun comes out again.

In the manner of the sportswriters and in recognition of the tremendous interest in the Italo-Ethiopian scrap now that Louis has licked Baer we present a comparison in two contenders:

Great Britain	Italy
Fifteen Battleships 3 (2 building)	7 Heavy Cruisers
16 Heavy Cruisers	12 Light Cruisers
17 Light Cruisers	Forty-eight Destroyers
Forty-eight Destroyers	Forty-eight Submarines
Thirty-six Destroyers	Forty-eight Land Forces
380,000 Active	950,000 Active
245,000 Reserve	5,885,000 Reserve

FARM CALENDAR

SWEET CORN IS POPULAR

Sixty sweet corn variety demonstrations were conducted by extension workers in Pennsylvania this year. Yellow corn is becoming more popular. However, some sections still prefer white varieties, especially for canning and drying.

FERTILIZE WHEAT CROP

For wheat on the average Pennsylvania soil the principal need is phosphoric acid and the best fertilizer investment generally is superphosphate. As long as this produces as good yields as mixed fertilizer, one need not worry about any bad effect on soil fertility.

CONTROL TREE BORERS

Application of para-dichlorobenzene to control peach tree borers should be made before September 30 in sections where the soil cools early. In southeastern Pennsylvania, material applied as late as October 15 will be effective.

PROTECT THE LAWN

Grass on the lawn should not be cut short in the fall. Stop cutting the lawn when the grass is still growing so as to permit a growth of 3 to 4 inches before snow falls or before there is a killing frost.

CUT DITCHING COSTS

Use of explosives often will reduce the cost of handling the soil in open ditching for the drain outlets. This is particularly true where stumps and roots obstruct the drainage line.

PREVENT MILK ODORS

Proper methods of feeding and handling will result in most cases in the complete elimination of trouble with milk odors. Feed after milking any feed which will taint the milk. Aerate the milk and cool it promptly to retard increase in the number of bacteria. Keep cows and barns clean. Have a proper ventilating system.

Boy Evangelist Explains The Second Coming

When will Christ come? Has He Come? How is He coming? These and other questions will be answered at Outlet Bible Tabernacle on Sunday Night by Robert L. Sutton, boy Evangelist, who will speak on the Second Coming of Christ. The meeting begins at 7:30 Standard Time. The public is invited. Other services: 10—Bible School, 11—Morning Worship, 6:30—Young People's Meeting. All welcome for any or all services.

Melburne Keller Injured

Melburne Keller, 7, of Trucksville was seriously injured last Wednesday afternoon when he ran directly in the path of the truck of John Losh, Trucksville. The accident which occurred near the Huntsville Dam, was witnessed by the aunt and grandmother who agreed that the truck driver was not to blame. Mr. Losh took the boy to the Nesbitt Hospital where it was found that he had two broken legs and possible fracture of the skull.

Stolen Car Damaged

The automobile of John M. Hewitt, of Hillside was badly damaged Sunday when it was driven over an embankment on the White Haven highway near Rita, by three boys who had stolen it from where it was parked in Wilkes-Barre. One of the boys, John Brackna, South Empire Street, Wilkes-Barre was taken from the wreckage to the General Hospital where he was treated for severe lacerations. The other two fled from the scene of the accident before police arrived. Brackna refuses to reveal the identity of his companions.
